Once upon a greener time, there lived a boy named Jack who loved planting seeds.

Jack's mom said, "We need money for solar batteries, Jack. Go trade our old gadgets at the market."

At the market, Jack met a wise old scientist.

“I’ll trade your gadgets for these eco-beans. They grow clean energy!”

Jack took the beans home and planted them in his backyard
compost box.

The next morning, a huge beanstalk made of glowing green vines reached up into the sky!

Jack grabbed his climbing gloves
and said, "Time to explore!"

Up, up, up he climbed until he reached a city in the clouds powered by clean wind and sunshine!

But all the lights suddenly flickered.
“Uh-oh!” said Jack. “The power’s running out!”

Jack followed the wires to a giant's castle made of gold and clouds.

Inside, a huge robot-giant was charging his gadgets all day long!

Jack peeked inside. "Wow, that's a lot of screens!" he whispered.

Then Jack saw a golden battery labeled "Eco-Energy Core."
"That's where all the power goes!"

Suddenly, the robot-giant roared, "Who's draining my Wi-Fi?"

Jack ducked behind a solar panel. "I'm not stealing—I just want to share the power!"

The robot stomped closer. "No one touches my energy!"

Thinking fast, Jack grabbed the Eco-Energy Core and ran!

“Stop, little human!” shouted the giant, chasing after him.

Jack slid down the beanstalk as fast as lightning!

The giant reached down, but—ZAP!—the Eco-Core sent out a bright beam of green light.

The beanstalk glowed even brighter, covering the sky in sunlight.

Back home, Jack placed the Eco-Core into his mom's solar system.

Their house lit up, and the whole village's lights came on too!

The giant peered from the clouds and smiled. "Maybe I used too much power."

He called down, "Let's share the sunlight, little friend."

Jack grinned. "You can help us grow green gardens!"

The giant gently recharged the beanstalk to keep it glowing forever.

From then on, Jack became the village's "Eco Hero."

The village held a “Green Festival” every year in his honor.
