What is a Feng Shui

New to BaZi astrology? Did you know that BaZi astrology is part of the Feng Shui system also known as Chinese Metaphysics? The word Feng Shui is the direct translation of the words “wind” and “water.” Wind is the carrier of Qi, aka energy, and water is the container of Qi.

Chinese Metaphysics have been used for over 3000 years in Asia. They are based on the concept of Yin & Yang and the relationships of the five elements. Most well known in the West, Feng Shui is the art of placement. Very few Westerners know of the full diversity of the application of BaZi astrology beyond the characteristics of their birth year animal printed on the placemat in a Chinese restaurant.

Contrary to popular belief, good Feng Shui is not about where you put your furniture, money tree, crystals, or any other trinkets to enhance the luck of the residents in the house. In a proper "Feng Shui" home, you will never see "Feng Shui" items lying around to deflect or improve the house and the residents' energies. When you enter a good "Feng Shui" space, it will be aesthetically pleasing and feel light and airy.

Feng Shui is not a religion. You don't need to believe in it or worship it for it to work. It is a system of alignment of energies. You operate it and it works, just like your cell phone; you don't need to know where the antenna is to make your call. You don't need to apply "Feng Shui" enhancement to the whole house, just focus on what goals or desires you want to achieve. You shouldn't use Feng Shui until you know exactly what you want. When properly aligned, the Heaven (vibrational), Earth (environmental), and Man (activities) energies are in harmony with each other. These are the invisible vibrational energies that shape our lives or our luck. When these energies are out of sync it can cause sickness, chaos, misfortune, and stress in our lives.

Flying Star Feng Shui

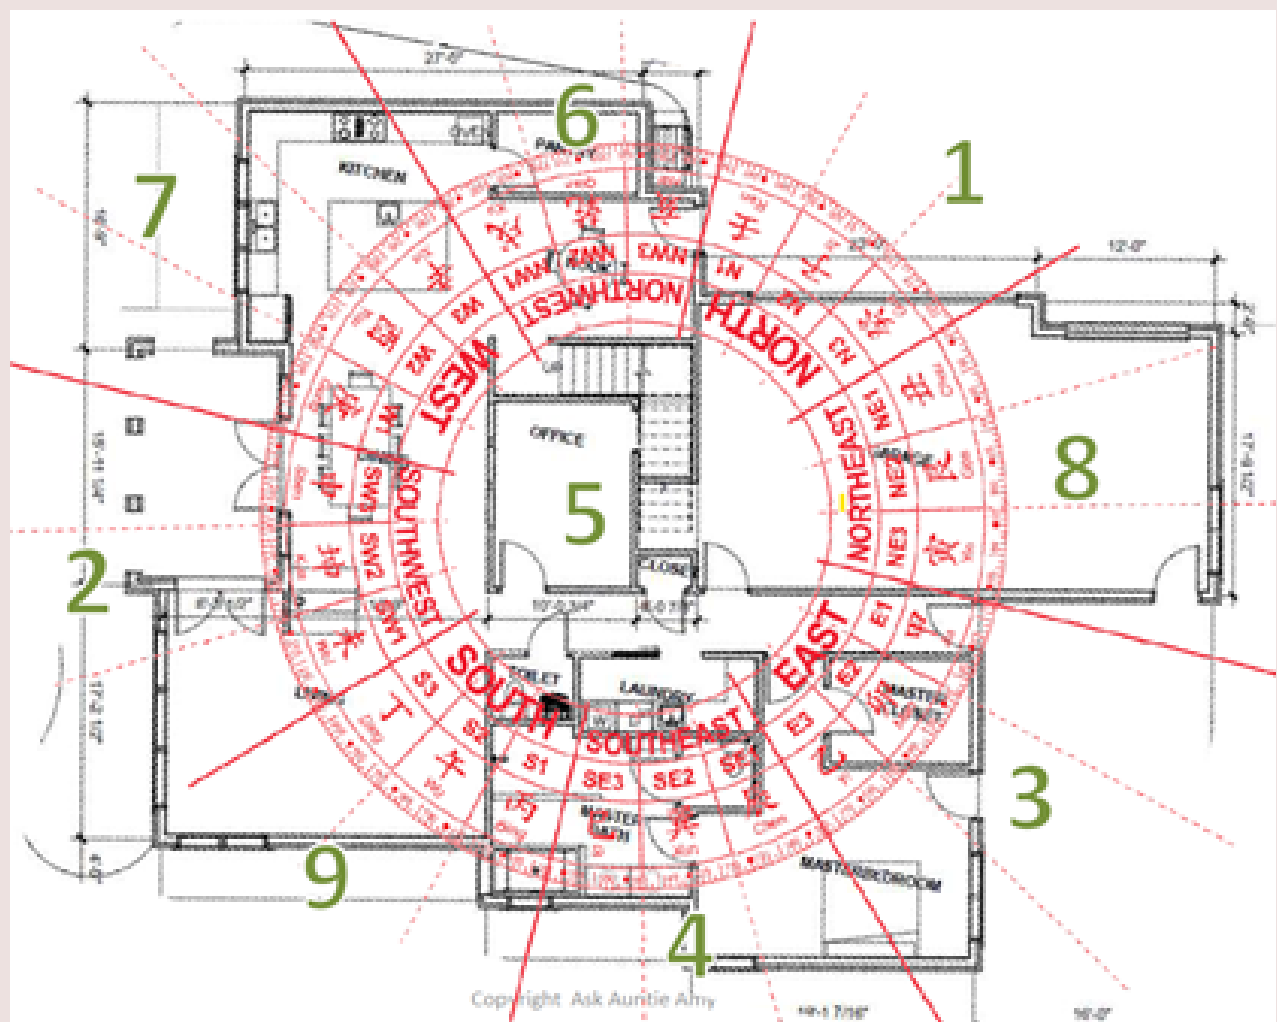

Flying Star Feng Shui is mainly used for short term activities. This is the annual energy map for those specific sectors. In 2022 all the stars are back to their original later heaven position. The key to using this successfully is to do the activities related to the specific type of energy in that sector. You only need to spend an hour or two each day there. For example, in 2022, one of the wealth sectors is in the Northeast sector of your house. Please do not just put a trinket there, put yourself there and do the activities instead.

You start by taking the correct compass measurements for your house. To do this, first, stand in the middle of your house. It is best to find the center of your house from it's floor plan. Take a compass reading, then divide your house into 9 sectors based on the compass direction, and mark each sector. See the next page for an example, and also watch the How To Tutorial video, link: <https://youtu.be/0sji2W4S7pY>

	S 157.6 - 202.5
SE 112.6 - 157.5	4	9	2	SW 202.6 - 247.5
E 67.6 - 112.5	3	5	7	W 247.6 - 292.5
NE 22.6 - 67.5	8	1	6	NW 292.6 - 337.5
	N 337.6 - 22.5

Locate the center of your house from your floor plan. If you have more than one floor, use the ground level floor, or the main floor of your house if the ground floor is the garage. Once you find the center then stand there, away from any metal items, and take a compass reading. You can use a real compass or a compass app on your phone. The easiest method is to find the north and note that on your floor plan. Then you can assign the Feng Shui numbers to their respective sectors, i.e. nine in the South, two in the SW, six in the NW and three in the E. Just remember that it is like cutting a pie; you are dividing up your house into eight slices from the center

What is a BaZi chart

A BaZi chart is a Chinese astrology chart that is based on your year, month, day, and time of birth. It is also known as the four pillars or the eight characters. I often refer to it as a treasure map that you are born with. The universe gave you this map that tells you what your natural skill sets, talents, and default characteristics are. It is up to you to pick up tools along the way through life experiences and education to uncover the treasures that are waiting for you.

The chart contains four pillars that are made up of two Chinese characters in each pillar. The top character is what we call the heavenly stem. It is one of the five elements, the water, wood, fire, earth and metal with the yin and yang polarities of each. They represent the energetic pattern of the year, month, day, and hour of your birth. The bottom character is what we call the earthly branches, which is the animal zodiac that we are familiar with such as the tiger, pig, monkey and rabbit. They contain energies of the five elements within them. I usually compare them to a to-go or take out container; while some might have one compartment, some have two and some have three. Therefore, each animal can have one to three different types of energies or elements within it. They also represent season and hour of the day.

The year pillar represents how you appear within your friend circle or the industry/market of your business. The month pillar represents your career, job description, or relationship with your parents. The day pillar represents who you are and your relationship with your spouse. The hour pillar represents your thoughts, ideas, and inspirations, as well as your relationship with your children, subordinates and investment. The year and the month pillars are what we call external aspects of your characters. It's what people can see from the outside about you or how you appear to the outside world. The day and hour pillars are the internal aspects of your characters.

The BaZi chart also gives you the timing of when and what type of luck cycle you'll be going through in your life. Your luck cycle changes every 10 years, so never worry if you're going through a period of bad luck, because it will change.
