10 questions to fall back in love.

It's easy, in a busy life, to stop being curious about the person you love. The deep conversations quietly get replaced by logistics. Here are ten gentle questions to reopen them. Pour two drinks, put the phones away, take turns, and truly listen.

- What first drew you to me, honestly?
- What's a small, ordinary moment with me that you treasure?
- What's something I do that makes you feel loved?
- What's a dream you have that I might not know about?
- When do you feel closest to me? What pulls us apart?
- What's the hardest we've ever laughed together?
- What makes you feel wanted by me?
- What is a way I could make you feel more wanted?
- What's one thing you'd love us to prioritize more?
- What ritual could we start to keep this closeness going?
- What are you most grateful for about us, right now?
- After all this, what do you love most about us?

HOW TO USE THESE

Ask one a week, or one a night if you're hungry for it. Take turns, and truly listen to each other's answers without rushing to reply or fix. There are no right answers, and you can skip any that don't suit you. Keep it warm, curious, and unhurried, never a test.

ONE RITUAL TO KEEP

When a question sparks something lovely, write it down. A year of these small, honest conversations quietly brings two people all the way back to each other.
