Introduction

Why This Book Exists

When someone you love dies, grief is only the beginning - your family is immediately faced with decisions, paperwork, and responsibility.

If you haven't organized your affairs, this process becomes a nightmare.

Your executor will spend months piecing your life together like a puzzle with no picture on the box. Trying to log into the IRS website with no credentials. Calling Chase, Bank of America, Wells Fargo, and Citi hoping to find accounts you never told anyone about. Discovering a 401(k) or IRA at a credit union nobody knew existed. Finding out you still owed $14,000 on a line of credit. Watching your kids argue over the vacation home because you never said who should get it.

It happens to thousands of American families every year. The Estate Organizer was created to make sure it doesn't happen to yours.

The United States is in the middle of the largest intergenerational wealth transfer in its history. An estimated $84 trillion is expected to change hands over the coming decades as baby boomers pass their wealth to the next generation. Yet roughly two-thirds of Americans don't have a will or estate plan. This organizer exists to ensure your share is transferred with clarity and intention - not consumed by confusion, conflict, or avoidable costs.

This isn't just a guide. It's a gift to the people you love.

It's a single, organized place where everything they need to know is written down clearly. Your bank accounts. Your retirement accounts. Your debts. Your passwords. Your funeral wishes. Your values. Your stories. Everything.

When you complete this organizer, you're not just ticking boxes. You're giving your family three things:

Clarity. They'll know exactly what you own, what you owe, and what you want.

Time. They won't waste months searching for information. They can focus on grieving and healing.

Peace. They won't argue about your wishes because your wishes are written in your own words.

This organizer won't replace your Will or your lawyer. But it will make sure your Will can actually be found, your lawyer can be contacted, and your family knows where to start.

What This Organizer Does

Estate planning isn't just about your Will.

Your Will says who gets your house and how to divide your bank accounts. That's important. But it doesn't tell your family where those bank accounts actually are. It doesn't explain why you left your wedding ring to your daughter instead of your son. It doesn't give them your passwords, your retirement plan details, or the name of the lawyer who drafted the Will in the first place. That's where this organizer comes in.

Think of it as a roadmap. When you're gone, your family will need to handle dozens of tasks. Some are legal. Some are financial. Some are deeply personal. And most of them require information that only you know right now.

Where's your Will? Who's your 401(k)/IRA beneficiary? What are the login details for your online banking? Do you want to be buried or cremated? Should your Facebook account be deleted or memorialized? What stories do you want your grandchildren to remember about you?

This organizer gives you a place to write all of that down.

It protects your family from chaos. Instead of searching through every drawer in your house, they'll open this book and find everything they need. Your bank accounts. Your insurance policies. Your passwords. Your final wishes.

It guides your executor. There are checklists and timelines so they know what to do first, what can wait, and what they might be forgetting.

It preserves your legacy. This isn't just about money and paperwork. There's space here for your values, your stories, and the things you want your family to remember after you're gone.

And it saves them money. Every hour your executor spends hunting for information is an hour they're paying a lawyer to help them hunt. At $300 to $600 per hour. By organizing it yourself, you're potentially saving your estate thousands of dollars in legal fees. That also means you can leave more to your loved ones and donate more to charities or causes that are close to your heart.

Every section covers something your executor will need. Retirement Savings. Tax records. Guardianship. Digital assets. Funeral wishes. Nothing has been left out. Not every section will apply to you - everyone is in a different situation - so feel free to skip what doesn't. There's no "one-size-fits-all." Don't worry if you have blank sections.

This is a big task. But once it's done, you'll have something invaluable. Peace of mind for you. A clear path forward for them.

A Living Document

Life changes. And when it does, this organizer needs to change with it.

If you fill out this organizer today and never touch it again, it'll be outdated in five years. Your executor will find bank accounts you closed years later. They'll try to contact your financial advisor who retired three years ago. They'll distribute assets according to wishes that no longer reflect what you actually wanted.

Review this organizer once a year and update it after major life events - marriage, divorce, retirement, the birth of a grandchild, or any significant change to your finances or wishes. Part X has a worksheet and checklist to make this easy.

If you commit to keeping this organizer up to date, your family will always know where they stand.

The Value of Your Story

Your legacy isn't just bank accounts and property titles.

It's the recipe for your grandmother's apple pie that's been passed down for four generations. It's the story about how you met your spouse. It's the advice you'd give your grandchildren if they asked. It's the values you lived by, the mistakes you learned from, and the things you want your family to remember about who you were.

Most estate planning documents don't capture any of that.

This organizer does.

There's space for letters, stories, and memories. You can write a note to each of your children. You can record family traditions you don't want forgotten. You can explain why certain things matter to you, and why you've made the decisions you've made.

These sections aren't legally binding. But they're often the most meaningful parts of this book - and might be the best part of filling this out.

Your executor will handle the paperwork. But your family will treasure the stories.

So as you work through the financial and legal sections, don't skip the personal ones. Take the time to write down what matters. Your grandchildren will read those words decades from now and feel like they knew you.

That's a legacy worth preserving.

How to Use This Organizer

This book is straightforward. Work through each section, fill in what applies to you, and skip what doesn't.

Here's how to get the most out of it:

Work through each section at your own pace.

You don't need to complete this in one sitting. Some sections will take five minutes. Others might take an hour. If a section doesn't apply to you (for example, if you don't own a business), just write "Not Applicable" so your executor knows you considered it.

Where it asks for supporting documents, attach copies if you can. Your Will. Your beneficiary designations. Your insurance policies. If you can't attach them, at least note where the originals are stored.

Be honest and thorough.

The small details matter. Policy numbers. Account references. Passwords. These little things can save your family hours of frustration and potentially thousands of dollars in fees.

If you're not sure about something, leave it blank and come back to it later. But try to be as complete as you can.

Involve your professional advisors.

Once you've filled this out, show the relevant sections to your lawyer, accountant, or financial advisor. Ask them to check that everything matches up with your legal documents. They might spot something you missed.

Review and update it regularly.

Life changes. So should this organizer.

Set a reminder to review it once a year. Update it after major life events like marriage, divorce, retirement, or the birth of a grandchild. There's a section at the back where you can record when you've done each update.

Store it somewhere safe but accessible.

Keep this organizer in a place where your executor can actually find it. A fireproof safe at home. Your lawyer's office. A safety deposit box (as long as your executor can access it without a court order).

Don't hide it somewhere so secure that no one will ever find it. That defeats the purpose.

Tell the right people where it is.

Let your executor know where this book is stored. Tell one or two trusted family members as well, just in case.

If no one knows it exists, all your hard work won't matter.

Remember what this organizer is (and isn't).

This book supports your Will. It doesn't replace it.

Your Will is the legally binding document that says who gets what. This organizer makes sure your Will can be found, your wishes can be understood, and your executor has the information they need to actually carry out those wishes.

For legally binding instructions, you'll still need to work with a lawyer. This organizer just makes their job much easier.

Let's get started.

What is Estate Planning and Why Does It Matter?

Estate planning is just a fancy term for organizing your affairs before you die.

It's about making sure your assets go to the people you want them to go to. It's about reducing the stress and cost for your family. And it's about making your wishes clear so no one has to guess what you would have wanted.

Most people think estate planning is just writing a Will. And yes, your Will is important. But it's only part of the picture.

Here's what estate planning actually covers:

Your Will. This is the legal document that says who gets your house, your savings, your car, and everything else you own. Without a Will, the state decides who gets what based on intestacy laws - a formula that might not match what you actually wanted.

Your registered retirement savings - 401(k)s, IRAs, Roth IRAs, and pension plans don't automatically go to your estate. They go to whoever you've named as your beneficiary. If you haven't named anyone, the funds flow into your estate and go through probate - which means delays, extra fees, and potentially a result you didn't want. That's not ideal.

Your power of attorney. This is the person who can make financial and legal decisions for you if you're alive but unable to make them yourself (for example, if you have a stroke or dementia).

Your healthcare directives. These documents tell doctors and family members what medical treatment you want (or don't want) if you can't communicate your wishes.

Your executor. This is the person responsible for sorting out your estate after you die. They need to know where your Will is, who your lawyer is, what you own, what you owe, and what your wishes are.

Your digital assets. Passwords. Online banking. Social media accounts.

Cryptocurrency. These things didn't exist 30 years ago, but now they're part of almost everyone's estate.

Why does this matter?

They'll spend months tracking down your bank accounts. They'll argue about what you "would have wanted" because you never said. They'll pay lawyers hundreds of dollars an hour to search for information you could have written down in 20 minutes.

Contesting a will in the United States can cost anywhere from $10,000 to $100,000 or more in legal fees, with estate litigation lawyers charging $200 to $500 per hour. Even uncontested estates aren't cheap - the average lawyer fee just to process probate is several thousand dollars, before court fees and estate/inheritance taxes are added on top. And once a dispute starts, it can drag on for a year or more. Every dollar spent on lawyers is a dollar your family doesn't inherit. That's what estate planning is. And that's why it matters.

This organizer won't replace your Will or your lawyer. But it will give your family the information they need to carry out your wishes without the chaos, the cost, or the conflict.

That's worth doing.

Before You Begin

This organizer is a tool for gathering and recording your information. It is not legal, financial, or tax advice, and it is not a Will. To put a valid estate plan in place, see a qualified lawyer. The full Important Legal Information is at the back of this book - please read it before you begin.

Personal Foundations

The essentials - who you are, your health, and the people to call first.

- 02 Medical Information
- 03 Healthcare Directives & Organ Donation
- 04 Key Contacts

Personal Information

This section covers your identity. Your full legal name, your date of birth, where you were born, and the documents that prove all of it.

Fill in what applies. If you don't have something (for example, if you've never had a passport), just write "N/A" so your executor knows you considered it.

Here's what to include:

Your full legal name. The name on your birth certificate, not the name you go by. If your legal name is "James" but everyone calls you "Jim," write James. Your executor needs the legal version for official documents.

Your date and place of birth. Day, month, year, and the town or city where you were born. This information appears on almost every legal form your executor will fill out.

Your Social Security Number (SSN). Your executor will need this to file your final tax return and deal with the IRS. Keep it somewhere secure, but make sure they can find it.

Your state ID or driver license number. Government agencies may ask for it.

Your driver license number. If you have one, include the number and the state that issued it. This helps with identification.

Your passport number. If you have a current passport (or an expired one), note the number and where it's stored. If you don't have one, write "N/A."

Birth certificates. Your own, and any for immediate family members who might be beneficiaries (your children, for example). Note where the originals are stored. If you only have copies, say so.

Marriage certificates. If you're married, your executor will need proof. If you've been married more than once, include certificates for all marriages.

Divorce or separation documents. If you're divorced, your executor needs to know. These documents affect how your estate is divided, especially if your Will was written before the divorce. Note where the originals are kept.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Without this information, your executor can't prove who you are. And if they can't prove who you are, they can't access your bank accounts, sell your property, or distribute your estate.

It's boring admin. But it's critical admin.

NOTES (ANYTHING ELSE YOUR EXECUTOR SHOULD KNOW ABOUT YOUR IDENTITY)

Medical Information

Your executor won't need your medical history to treat you (you'll be gone). But they will need it for a few important reasons.

First, to complete your death certificate and notify your doctors. Second, to claim on any relevant insurance policies (some require medical history). And third, to give your family a record of hereditary conditions they should know about.

This section also helps if you become incapacitated before you die. If you have a stroke or dementia and can't communicate, your family will need to know your medical conditions, allergies, and current medications. Here's what to fill in. Fill in what you know. If you're healthy and rarely see a doctor, that's fine - just write "generally healthy, no ongoing conditions." If you have a long medical history, include the big stuff (chronic conditions, major surgeries, serious allergies). You don't need to list every cold you've ever had.

Here's what to include:

Your Primary Care Physician (PCP). Name, clinic, phone number, and address. This is the first person your family will contact if something happens to you.

Your specialists. If you see a cardiologist, endocrinologist, oncologist, or any other specialist regularly, list their names and contact details. Include what they're treating you for.

Your current medications. List any prescription medications you take regularly. Include the name, dosage, and what it's for. If you're not on any regular medications, write "None."

Your significant medical conditions. Chronic illnesses (diabetes, heart disease, asthma, etc.), past surgeries, mental health conditions, or anything else that's part of your medical history. If you're in good health, write "No significant conditions."

Your allergies. Medications, foods, or anything else you're allergic to. If you have none, write "No known allergies."

Your blood type. If you know it, include it. If you don't, write "Unknown."

Your private health insurance details. If you have private health cover, include the insurer's name, your membership number, and what level of cover you have (hospital, extras, or both). Your executor might need this to claim on policies or cancel your membership.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your family will need to notify your doctors and cancel appointments. They'll need your medical history for insurance claims. And if you have hereditary conditions (heart disease, certain cancers, diabetes), your children should know about them.

You've just given them a clear medical snapshot. That's one less thing they'll need to hunt for.

Healthcare Directives & Organ Donation

This section is about what happens if you're alive but can't make decisions for yourself.

If you have a stroke, develop dementia, or end up in a coma, someone will need to make medical decisions on your behalf. Who should that be? What kind of treatment do you want (or not want)? Do you want to be resuscitated if your heart stops? Do you want to donate your organs?

These are hard questions. But answering them now means your family won't have to guess later.

In the United States, there are a few key documents that cover this:

Advance Directive (Living Will) (also called a Living Will in some states). This is a legal document where you write down your wishes for medical treatment if you can't communicate. It might say things like "I do not want to be kept alive on life support indefinitely" or "I want all reasonable medical treatment to extend my life." Each state has different rules about Advance Care Directives, so check what applies where you live.

Health Care Proxy (called different names in different states). This is a person you appoint to make medical, lifestyle, and personal decisions for you if you lose capacity. They can decide things like where you live, what medical treatment you receive, and whether you go into long-term care. This is different from a Power of Attorney (which covers financial decisions).

Your wishes for end-of-life care. Do you want palliative care at home or in a hospice? Do you have a "Do Not Resuscitate" (DNR) order? Do you want pain relief even if it shortens your life?

Your organ donation preferences. Are you registered as an organ donor? Which organs do you want to donate? Does your family know your wishes?

WHY THIS MATTERS

If you don't document this, your family will have to make these decisions while they're stressed, grieving, and possibly arguing with each other about what you "would have wanted."

By writing it down, you take that burden off them. Make your wishes clear now, so they don't have to guess later.

Key Contacts

When you die, your executor will need to notify a lot of people.

Some need to know immediately (your spouse, your children, your executor). Others can wait a few days or weeks (your employer, your accountant, your insurance company).

This section gives your executor a complete list so they don't have to guess who to call, or spend hours searching for phone numbers while they're grieving.

Let's break this into two groups: people who need to know right away, and people who need to know eventually.

Who to notify immediately:

Your immediate family. Spouse, children, parents, siblings. These are the people who should hear the news first, directly from your executor (or from each other).

Your executor. If your executor isn't also your spouse or child, they need to be contacted immediately so they can start handling your estate.

Your close friends. The people who would want to know, and who would be hurt if they found out too late.

Who to notify within days or weeks:

Your lawyer. The person who drafted your Will and any other legal documents.

Your accountant. They'll need to file your final tax return and handle any outstanding tax matters.

Your financial advisor. If you have one, they'll need to know so they can work with your executor to manage your investments, retirement savings, and other financial matters.

Your employer. If you're still working, your employer needs to be notified so they can process final pay, 401(k) employer match contributions, and any outstanding paid time off and benefits.

Your retirement plan. Your executor will need to contact your 401(k) or IRA providers to process the transfer to your named beneficiaries, and apply for the Social Security death benefit through the Social Security Administration.

Social Security Administration (if applicable). If you receive any Social Security payments (Social Security retirement benefits, SSDI, SSI, or other government benefits), these need to be canceled.

Your private health insurer (if applicable). So they can cancel your policy and process any final claims.

Your insurance providers. Life insurance, disability insurance, home and contents, car insurance - all of these need to be notified.

Your long-term care facility (if applicable). If you're living in long-term care, the facility needs to be informed.

Your religious or community leader (if applicable). Your priest, pastor, imam, rabbi, or community group leader - whoever would help organize your funeral or memorial service.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your executor shouldn't have to play detective to find these people. And your family shouldn't have to guess who was important to you.

By writing it all down, you're giving them a roadmap. They'll know exactly who to call, when to call them, and how to reach them.

That's one less thing they'll need to figure out.

PART TWO

Core Estate Planning

The big decisions - your Will, your executor, and who looks after who.

- 05 Will and Testament
- 06 Estate Executor
- 07 Guardianship of Children & Dependents
- 08 Funeral Arrangements

Will and Testament

Your Will is the most important legal document in your estate. It's the document that says who gets your house, your savings, your car, your jewelry, and everything else you own. It names your executor (the person responsible for carrying out your wishes). And if you have children under 18, it names their guardian.

If you die without a Will, each state has its own default rules for who inherits, and they may not match what you would have chosen. Those rules vary by state and can be a surprise to your family, so the safest move is to have a Will drafted and to confirm how your state's rules would apply with an estate attorney.

So if you don't have a Will yet, get one. This organizer is not a substitute for a Will. It supports your Will by making sure your executor can actually find it and understand it.

Here's what to include in this section:

Do you have a Will? If yes, when was it written? Wills should be updated every few years or after major life changes (marriage, divorce, kids, buying property). If your Will was written 15 years ago and you've remarried since then, it's probably out of date.

Where is the original Will stored? Your executor needs the original, not a copy. Most people keep it with their lawyer, in a safe at home, or in a safety deposit box. Wherever it is, write it down.

Who is your executor? This is the person (or people) you've named in your Will to carry out your wishes. The exact powers and duties of an executor vary by state, so encourage them to get professional guidance. Include their name and contact details. If you've named a backup executor, include them too.

Who drafted your Will? Include your lawyer's name and contact details. Your executor may want to contact them to confirm the Will and get guidance, since how an estate is handled (and whether probate is needed) varies by state.

Does your Will include a testamentary trust? Some Wills set up a trust to manage assets for beneficiaries (for example, if you're leaving money to young children who can't manage it yet). If yours does, note it here.

Have you made a beneficiary designation for your retirement savings? If you haven't named a beneficiary, it flows into your estate and goes through probate. Make sure you've done this, and note where the nomination is stored.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your Will is only useful if your executor can find it. And they need to know who to contact (your lawyer), where the original is stored, and whether there are any special provisions (like a testamentary trust).

By filling this out, you're making sure your Will doesn't sit in a drawer gathering dust while your family searches for it.

You've just saved them weeks of stress.

NOTES (ANYTHING ELSE YOUR EXECUTOR SHOULD KNOW ABOUT YOUR WILL)

Estate Executor

If you've named an executor in your Will, this section is for them.

Being an executor is a big job. It's not just about reading the Will and handing out inheritances. There's paperwork, phone calls, court applications, tax returns, and a lot of admin that most executors aren't prepared for.

This section gives your executor a roadmap. It tells them what their role involves, what you expect from them, and where to find the information they'll need.

What does an executor actually do?

Your executor is responsible for managing your estate from the day you die until everything is distributed to your beneficiaries. Here's what that involves:

Organize your funeral (unless someone else is handling it).

Locate your Will and find out whether probate is needed (this varies by state and by the size and type of your estate, so your executor should check with an attorney early on).

Notify relevant people and organizations (family, banks, Social Security, your employer, etc.).

Secure your property and assets (lock up your house, take care of your car, protect valuables).

Value your estate (work out what you own and what you owe).

Pay your debts (credit cards, loans, mortgages, final bills).

File your final tax return and pay any taxes owed.

Distribute your assets according to your Will.

Close your estate and provide a final accounting to beneficiaries.

This process can take many months, sometimes longer, depending on your state and how complicated your estate is. Your executor's attorney can give a realistic timeframe for your situation.

What you can do to help your executor:

You can't make their job easy (it's never easy). But you can make it easier.

By completing this organizer, you've already done most of the hard work. Your executor will know where your Will is, what assets you own, who to contact, and what your wishes are.

But you can also leave them specific instructions. Things like:

"Sell the house and split the proceeds. Don't let it sit empty for months."

"Make sure my dog goes to Sarah. She's already agreed to take him."

"Use my retirement account (401(k)/IRA) death benefit to pay off the mortgage before distributing other assets."

"Don't feel pressured to keep the family home if it's too expensive to maintain. Sell it if that makes sense."

These notes aren't a substitute for your legal documents, but they give your executor helpful guidance when they're making decisions. Your formal documents (like your Will, trusts and beneficiary designations) are what carry legal weight, so keep those up to date with your attorney.

Let's make this clear for them.

A MESSAGE TO YOUR EXECUTOR

If you're reading this, I've died, and you've agreed to be my executor. Thank you.

I know this is a big responsibility, and I'm grateful you've taken it on.

This organizer is here to help you. It contains everything you need to know about my assets, my debts, my contacts, and my wishes. Use it as your roadmap.

A few things to remember:

Take your time. There's no rush. Grief is exhausting, and estate administration is complicated. Don't feel pressured to do everything at once.

Get professional help. You don't have to do this alone. My lawyer (details in the Key Contacts section) can guide you through probate. My accountant can help with the tax return. Use them.

Don't feel guilty about being paid for your time. In many cases an executor can receive a fee for their work, though how that's set depends on your state and on your Will. Check with the estate's attorney or accountant about what applies here.

Ignore unhelpful family members. Some people will question your decisions, complain about timelines, or demand updates every week. You're doing your best. That's enough.

Follow the Will, not the drama. Your job is to carry out my wishes as written in my Will, not to make everyone happy. You can't please everyone, so don't try.

Thank you for doing this. I trust you. And I've tried to make it as easy as possible.

You've got this.

YOUR INSTRUCTIONS FOR YOUR EXECUTOR - AND ANYTHING ELSE THEY NEED TO KNOW

Guardianship of Children & Dependents

If you have children under 18, this is one of the most important sections in this book.

If you and your partner both die while your children are still minors, someone will need to raise them. That person is called a guardian.

In your Will, you can name who you'd want as guardian. Courts generally give a lot of weight to that choice, though the final decision rests with a judge and the rules vary by state. If no one is named, a court decides without your input, so it's worth setting this out with your attorney.

This section helps you think through who should raise your children if you can't. It also gives your executor (and the court, if necessary) a clear understanding of your wishes.

Who should be your children's guardian?

This is a deeply personal decision. Here are some things to consider:

Who shares your values? You want someone who will raise your children the way you would have. Think about religion, education, discipline, lifestyle.

Who has the capacity? Raising kids is expensive and time-consuming. Does this person have the financial stability, the time, and the energy to take on your children?

Who do your kids already have a relationship with? It's easier for kids to move in with someone they already know and trust (an aunt, uncle, grandparent, or close family friend).

Who lives in a stable environment? You want your kids to go somewhere safe, predictable, and emotionally healthy.

Does your partner agree? If you're raising your kids with a partner, make sure you're both on the same page about who the guardian should be.

Have you asked them? Don't just assume someone will take your kids. Ask them first. Make sure they're willing and able.

What about a backup guardian?

Life changes. The person you nominate today might not be able to take on your children in five or ten years. That's why you should also nominate a backup guardian (sometimes called a substitute guardian).

If your first choice can't or won't do it, your backup steps in.

What if you have dependents who aren't children?

If you have an adult child with a disability, an elderly parent you're caring for, or anyone else who depends on you, this section is for them too.

Caring for an adult who depends on you is handled differently from caring for a minor child, and the options vary by state. You can express your wishes here, and your attorney can explain the right legal tools for your situation (such as a trust for their care or other arrangements).

WHY THIS MATTERS

If you don't nominate a guardian, the court decides. And the court doesn't know your family the way you do.

By nominating someone (and a backup), you're making sure your children go to someone you trust, someone who loves them, and someone who will raise them the way you would have.

That's worth thinking through carefully.

Funeral Arrangements

Your funeral is the last time your family and friends will gather to remember you.

Some people have very specific wishes about how that should happen. Others don't care and just want their family to do whatever feels right. Both approaches are fine.

But if you do have preferences - about burial vs cremation, religious service vs secular celebration, big gathering vs small and intimate - this is the place to write them down.

By documenting your wishes, you're taking the pressure off your family. They won't have to guess what you would have wanted, and they won't argue about it while they're grieving.

Burial or cremation?

This is the first big decision.

Burial means your body is placed in a coffin and buried in a cemetery or natural burial ground. You'll need a burial plot if you don't already have one. Costs vary widely by location and type of plot, so it's worth getting a current quote from a local cemetery or funeral home rather than relying on a fixed figure.

Cremation means your body is cremated and your ashes are returned to your family. They can scatter your ashes, keep them in an urn, bury them, or place them in a columbarium (a memorial wall for ashes). Cremation is often less expensive than burial, but the actual cost varies by provider and location, so ask a local funeral home for a current price.

Some people also choose green or natural burials (biodegradable coffin, no embalming, natural woodland burial site) or donation to medical science (your body is used for medical research or training).

What kind of service do you want?

Funerals can take many forms. Here are a few common options in the United States:

Traditional funeral service: A formal service at a church, funeral home, or chapel, followed by burial or cremation. Usually includes a eulogy, hymns or music, and a gathering afterward.

Memorial service: A service held after the body has been buried or cremated. Often less formal, and can be held weeks or even months later.

Celebration of life: A less formal gathering focused on celebrating your life rather than mourning your death. Music, stories, photos, and sometimes food or drinks.

Graveside or crematorium service: A short service at the burial site or crematorium, often just family and close friends.

Direct cremation or burial: No service at all. Your body is cremated or buried without a gathering. Some families hold a private memorial later.

Religious or secular?

If you follow a particular faith (Catholic, Anglican, Jewish, Muslim, Hindu, Buddhist, etc.), your family will likely assume you want a religious service. But if you don't, make that clear.

If you're not religious, you might want a secular celebrant to lead the service instead of a clergy member.

What about the details?

If you have specific requests for your service, write them down. Things like:

Music: Do you want specific songs played? Live music or recorded?

Readings or poems: Is there a particular piece of writing you'd like read?

Eulogy: Who should speak about your life? (Or do you want to write your own eulogy and have someone read it?)

Dress code: Formal or casual? Black or colorful?

Flowers: Do you want floral arrangements, or would you prefer donations to a charity instead?

Wake or reception: Do you want people to gather after the service? If so, where?

What happens to your body before the funeral?

Practices around embalming and refrigeration vary by state and by funeral home. If you have a preference (for religious, environmental or personal reasons), note it here, and your family can confirm what's possible with the funeral home at the time.

If you have strong feelings about embalming (some people prefer not to for religious, environmental, or personal reasons), note that here.

Have you prepaid for your funeral?

Some people prepay for their funeral to lock in costs and relieve their family of the financial burden. If you've done this, your executor needs to know.

Prepaid funerals in the United States are usually managed through a funeral bond (an investment held by a funeral director) or a prepaid funeral plan (you pay upfront and the funeral home guarantees the service).

If you've prepaid, include the details here: which funeral home, what's covered, and where the paperwork is.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Funerals can be a significant expense for your family, and the total depends a lot on the choices made and where you live. Documenting your wishes (and prepaying if you can) helps reduce both the cost and the stress for them. A local funeral home can give current pricing.

By documenting your wishes (and ideally prepaying if you can), you're giving them clarity, reducing stress, and potentially saving them thousands of dollars.

That's a gift.

Insurance Policies

Insurance policies are often worth more than people realize.

Your life insurance might pay out $500,000 or more. Your disability insurance could provide ongoing payments to your family. Your employer benefits plan might include group life insurance and long-term disability coverage worth hundreds of thousands of dollars.

But if your executor doesn't know these policies exist, the money never gets claimed.

That's why this section matters. Your executor needs to know what insurance you have, who the beneficiaries are, and how to claim it.

What types of insurance matter for your estate?

Not all insurance is relevant to your executor. Pet insurance and travel insurance don't matter when you're dead. But these do:

Life insurance. This pays a lump sum to your nominated beneficiaries (or your estate) when you die. It's designed to replace your income and help your family financially. If you have life insurance, your executor needs to know the insurer, policy number, benefit amount, and who the beneficiaries are.

Many employers offer group life insurance as part of their benefits, separate from any standalone policy you buy yourself. If you have it, it's usually claimed through your employer's benefits provider. Note where it is so your executor knows to ask your employer, and they can confirm exactly how to claim it.

LTD insurance (Long-Term Disability). This pays out if you become permanently disabled and can't work. It's often bundled with life insurance or retirement savings. If you're already disabled or terminally ill when filling this out, note whether you've already claimed this.

Disability Insurance. This pays a portion of your income if you can't work due to illness or injury. It stops when you die, so it's not relevant to your estate - but if you're terminally ill and still alive, your family might be able to claim it in your final months.

Trauma insurance (critical illness insurance). This pays a lump sum if you're diagnosed with a serious illness like cancer, heart attack, or stroke. Like disability insurance, it's only relevant if you're still alive. But if you're terminally ill, it might provide money to your family before you die.

Home and contents insurance. If you own a home, your executor will need to keep the insurance active until the property is sold or transferred. Include the insurer and policy number.

Car insurance. Same as home insurance - your executor needs to keep it active or cancel it. Include the insurer and policy number.

What about health insurance?

Supplemental Health Insurance is important while you're alive, but it's not an asset for your estate. Your executor will just cancel it after you die.

Even so, include it here if you want - your executor will need to contact the insurer anyway.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Insurance payouts can be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. But they don't get paid automatically. Your executor (or your beneficiaries) have to apply for them.

If your executor doesn't know a policy exists, that money is lost.

Write it all down. Include policy numbers, insurers, and beneficiaries. It's worth checking that your beneficiaries are current, especially after a divorce. Rules about whether an ex-spouse stays as beneficiary vary by state and by the type of policy or account, so the safest approach is to review and update each designation directly with the provider and confirm with your attorney.

You've just protected your family's financial future.

NOTES (ANYTHING ELSE ABOUT YOUR INSURANCE)

Bank Accounts & Investments

This section covers your everyday money and your investment portfolio.

Your executor will need to know every bank account, every share portfolio, every term deposit, and every investment you own. They'll need account numbers, balances (approximately), and access details.

Without this information, your executor will spend weeks calling every bank in the United States asking, "Did they have an account with you?"

Let's make it easy for them.

Your bank accounts:

Most Americans have multiple bank accounts. Transaction accounts. Savings accounts. Offset accounts. Term deposits. Joint accounts with a spouse.

Your executor needs to know about all of them.

For each account, include:

- The bank's name (e.g., Chase, Bank of America, Wells Fargo, Citi)
- The type of account (transaction, savings, offset, term deposit, etc.)
- The account number (or at least the routing number and last few digits)
- Approximate balance (doesn't need to be exact - just a rough idea)
- Whether it's a joint account (and who the other account holder is)
- Where the account is linked (e.g., "linked to home loan as offset account")

Your executor will use this information to close accounts, transfer balances, and make sure nothing is left unclaimed.

Your investments:

If you own shares, mutual funds, bonds, or any other investments, your executor needs to know.

For each investment, include:

- What it is (e.g., "Apple shares," "Vanguard American Shares ETF")
- Where it's held (e.g., "through Fidelity," "Vanguard")
- Account number or brokerage account number

- Approximate value (you don't need to track daily fluctuations - just a ballpark figure)
- How to access it (online login, contact broker, etc.)

If you have a financial adviser managing your investments, include their contact details. Your executor will need to work with them.

What about cryptocurrency?

If you own Bitcoin, Ethereum, or any other cryptocurrency, include it here. Your executor needs to know:

- What you own (Bitcoin, Ethereum, etc.)
- Where it's stored (which exchange or wallet)
- How to access it (recovery phrase, login details, hardware wallet location)

Crypto is notoriously difficult for executors to access. If your family doesn't know it exists or can't access your wallet, that money is gone forever.

Store your recovery phrases securely (not in this book - it's too risky). But tell your executor where to find them.

Joint accounts and beneficiary nominations:

Some bank accounts and investments are held jointly (usually with a spouse). When one person dies, the account usually passes automatically to the surviving account holder. Your executor doesn't need to do anything.

But they still need to know the account exists so they can notify the bank.

Some investments also allow you to name a beneficiary (similar to a 401(k)/IRA). If you've done this, note it here.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Americans lose millions of dollars every year in unclaimed bank accounts and investments. The money is there, but no one knows about it.

By documenting your accounts and investments, you're making sure your family gets every dollar you've saved.

You've just saved them weeks of detective work.

Retirement Savings & Pensions

For most Americans, retirement savings are among the biggest assets in their estate.

Your 401(k) or IRA balance might be worth $200,000, $500,000, or even $1 million or more. And when you die, those funds don't automatically go through your estate. If you've named a beneficiary, they go directly to that person - outside your Will, outside probate, and outside your executor's control.

If you haven't named a beneficiary, the funds fall into your estate, go through probate, and get distributed according to your Will. That means delays, extra fees, and potentially a result you didn't intend.

This section is about making sure your retirement savings go to the right people, and making sure your executor knows where everything is.

How do retirement savings accounts work when you die?

The United States has several types of retirement accounts, and each one is treated differently when you die:

401(k) Plans and Traditional IRAs

Retirement accounts like a 401(k) or IRA are taxed differently from most of your other assets, and the rules depend on who inherits them and what type of account it is. The tax can be significant for some beneficiaries, so this is an area where your executor and your accountant should work together. Note where the accounts are and who the beneficiaries are, and leave the tax calculations to a professional.

Required Minimum Distributions (RMDs)

An inherited IRA is taxed based on who receives it and how they take it out over time, rather than being a single line on your final return. A surviving spouse usually has more options than other beneficiaries. The details get technical, so leave the calculation to your accountant and just record where the account is and who the beneficiary is.

Roth IRAs

Roth IRAs have their own inheritance and tax rules, and a surviving spouse generally has more flexibility than other beneficiaries. The specifics (including timing rules) can affect the tax, so confirm how yours would be treated with your accountant or plan provider. Here, just record where the account is and who you've named. If you name no one, the Roth IRA falls into your estate.

Employer Pensions (Defined Benefit & Defined Contribution)

If you have a workplace pension, the rules depend on the plan and your state. Most defined benefit plans provide a survivor pension to your spouse. Defined contribution plans typically pay out the balance to your named beneficiary. Check with your employer or plan administrator for the specific rules.

Social Security

Social Security provides three possible benefits on death:

- Social Security pays a small one-time death benefit to certain eligible survivors, such as a surviving spouse or dependent child. The amount and who qualifies are set by the Social Security Administration and can change, so your executor or spouse should confirm the current rules with the SSA at 1-800-772-1213. - Social Security Survivor's Pension: An ongoing monthly payment to your surviving spouse or domestic partner, based on your contributions. - Social Security may pay a monthly benefit for dependent children, with age limits set by the Social Security Administration. The exact cutoffs and conditions can change, so your spouse or executor should confirm eligibility directly with the SSA rather than relying on a fixed age here.

Your executor will need to apply for all of these through the Social Security Administration.

Social Security retirement benefits

Social Security retirement payments stop at death, and your executor should notify the Social Security Administration promptly. Payments received after death usually have to be returned, and the SSA can explain exactly how that's handled for your situation. Social Security is not an asset - it's income while you're alive. But include it here so your executor knows to cancel it.

Beneficiary designations - why they matter

For 401(k)s, IRAs, Roth IRAs, and most employer pensions, you can name a beneficiary directly with the financial institution. This is separate from your Will.

When you name a beneficiary, the funds bypass your estate entirely. They go straight to that person, without probate, without delay, and (in the case of a spousal rollover) potentially without tax.

If you don't name a beneficiary, the funds fall into your estate. That means they're subject to probate fees, they're accessible to creditors, and they're distributed according to your Will - which may or may not match what you actually wanted.

In the United States, you can name anyone as your beneficiary - your spouse, your children, a friend, a charity, anyone. There are no restrictions on who you can name. (But keep in mind that naming someone other than your spouse may trigger a large tax bill on your final return.)

Once you file a beneficiary designation it generally stays in place until you change it, but events like divorce can affect it in some states, and plans have their own rules. That's why it's worth reviewing your designations periodically and confirming they still say what you intend, directly with each provider. It's worth reviewing your designations after major life events like marriage, divorce or the birth of a child. Whether a divorce automatically changes a beneficiary designation depends on your state and the type of account, so don't assume either way, update the designation directly and confirm with your attorney.

For many accounts, the beneficiary you've named with the financial institution controls who receives the money, which can be different from what your Will says. Because the rules vary by account type and state, the safest step is to make sure your beneficiary designations and your Will say the same thing, and to confirm that with your attorney.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Retirement savings are often the largest asset in an American estate. They're also the asset most likely to cause problems - because people forget to name a beneficiary, forget to update their designation after a divorce, or don't realize the tax consequences of leaving a 401(k) or IRA to a non-spouse.

If your executor knows where your accounts are, who the beneficiaries are, and where the paperwork is stored, the process will be straightforward.

If they don't, your family could face unnecessary taxes, probate fees, and months of delays.

Get this right. It's worth it.

Your Retirement Savings & Pensions

Your retirement savings are often your biggest asset, and it does not pass through your Will. Make sure it goes where you intend.

Trusts & Trust Protector Information

If you have a family trust, a unit trust, or any other type of trust structure, your executor needs to know about it.

Trusts are common in the United States, especially for families with businesses, investment properties, or significant wealth. They're used to protect assets, minimize tax, and control how money is distributed to beneficiaries.

But trusts are also complex. And if your executor doesn't understand how your trust works, or who controls it, things can go very wrong very quickly.

This section helps your executor understand your trust structures and know who to contact for help.

What is a trust?

A trust is a legal arrangement where assets (money, property, investments, businesses) are held by a trustee for the benefit of beneficiaries.

Think of it like this:

- The trustee is the legal owner of the assets (they hold them "in trust")
- The beneficiaries are the people who benefit from those assets (they receive income or capital)
- The Trust Protector (or principal) is the person who controls the trust (they can hire and fire the trustee)

People use trusts for different reasons, and depending on the type, a trust may help with things like avoiding probate, managing assets for others, or planning. Whether a trust offers any tax or asset-protection benefit depends entirely on its type and your situation, so that's a conversation for your attorney and accountant.

Types of trusts in the United States:

Families set up trusts in many different forms, and the right structure depends on your goals and your state's law. How a trust is taxed and what it can do varies a lot, so don't rely on a general description here, ask your attorney or accountant what type of trust (if any) fits your situation.

Unit trust. Similar to shares in a company. Each beneficiary owns "units" in the trust, and income is distributed according to how many units they own. Less flexible than a discretionary trust, but more predictable.

Testamentary trust. This type of trust is created in your Will and only comes into effect after you die. It's used to protect assets for young children, beneficiaries with disabilities, or to manage tax-effectively.

A self-directed IRA is a retirement account, so note it in the Retirement Savings section rather than here. If you're unsure how to record any of your accounts, your accountant or plan provider can point you to the right place.

What's a Trust Protector, and why does it matter?

The Trust Protector is the person who controls the trust. They have the power to:

- Appoint (hire) and remove (fire) the trustee
- Effectively control who benefits from the trust

Some trusts name a 'protector' or similar role with powers over the trustee, but not all do, and what happens if that person dies depends on the trust document and your state's law. If your trust has a role like this, note who fills it and ask the trust's attorney what should happen next, so there's no gap.

If you're the Trust Protector of a family trust, you need to specify in your Will who becomes the Trust Protector after you die. Otherwise, the trust deed will determine it (and the trust deed might say something you didn't intend).

WHY THIS MATTERS

If you control a family trust and you don't plan for what happens when you die, your family could lose control of millions of dollars.

Your executor needs to know:

- What trusts you're involved in
- Whether you're a trustee, beneficiary, or Trust Protector
- Where the trust deed is stored
- Who the accountant is (they'll need professional help)

Trusts are complicated. Don't leave your family guessing.

Trusts don't end when you do. Your executor must know they exist and who keeps them running.

Property Ownership & Real Estate

For many Americans, property is their biggest asset.

Your family home. Your investment properties. Your vacation home. Raw land. Commercial premises. These assets might be worth hundreds of thousands or even millions of dollars.

Your executor needs to know what property you own, how you own it, what you owe on it, and what you want done with it.

This section covers all of it.

How do you own property?

The way you own property affects what happens to it when you die. There are a few different ownership structures in the United States:

Sole ownership. You own it 100% in your name. When you die, it goes into your estate and is distributed according to your Will.

When property is held jointly with a right of survivorship, it often passes to the surviving owner outside the Will, but exactly how depends on how the title is worded and on your state (some states have their own forms of co-ownership for married couples). Note how each property is held, and confirm what it means for you with a real estate attorney.

If you own a share of a property as a tenant in common, your share generally becomes part of your estate rather than passing automatically to the co-owner, but the precise effect depends on the title and your state. Record your share and how it's held, and confirm the details with a real estate attorney. This is common for investment properties owned with business partners or family members.

Through a trust or company. The property is owned by a trust or company, not by you personally. When you die, the property stays in the trust or company. But your executor needs to know about it so they can deal with your interest in the trust or company.

Your executor needs to know how each property is owned. If it's joint tenancy, they don't need to sell it (it goes to the survivor automatically). If it's tenants in common or sole ownership, they'll need to deal with it as part of your estate.

What about mortgages?

If you have a mortgage on any property, your executor needs to know:

- How much is owing

- Who the lender is
- Whether there's mortgage insurance (some lenders include insurance that pays off the loan if you die)

If there's no mortgage insurance, the debt stays with the property. Your executor will need to either:

- Pay off the mortgage (using estate funds or selling other assets)
- Sell the property and pay off the mortgage from the sale proceeds
- Transfer the property to a beneficiary who takes on the mortgage

What about investment properties?

If you own rental properties, your executor needs to know:

- Who the tenants are (and their lease details)
- Who the property manager is (if you use one)
- What rental income it generates
- What expenses it has (property tax, insurance, maintenance, HOA fees)

Your executor will need to keep the property running (collecting rent, paying bills) until it's sold or transferred to a beneficiary.

What do you want done with your property?

Your Will says who inherits your property. But your executor might need to make decisions about timing and strategy.

For example:

- Should they sell immediately, or wait for a better market?
- Should they renovate before selling to get a better price?
- Should they keep a rental property running and transfer it to a beneficiary with tenants in place?

If you have strong preferences about this, write them down. They're not legally binding (only your Will is), but they give your executor guidance.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Property is usually the most valuable (and most complicated) part of an estate.

If your executor doesn't know what you own, how it's owned, what's owed on it, or what you want done with it, they'll make decisions without all the information.

By documenting it here, you're giving them everything they need.

You've just made the biggest part of their job much easier.

Business Ownership & Succession Planning

If you own a business, your executor needs to know about it.

Businesses don't pause when you die. Employees still need to be paid. Suppliers still need to be managed. Customers still need to be served. And someone needs to make decisions about whether to keep the business running, sell it, or close it down.

Without clear instructions and information, your business could lose value quickly - or collapse entirely.

This section helps your executor understand your business, know who to contact, and make informed decisions about its future.

What kind of business structure do you have?

The structure of your business affects what happens when you die:

If you run the business in your own name (a sole proprietorship), what happens to it when you die depends on your situation, your executor may be able to sell it as a going concern or wind it down. Because this is a legal and tax question, your executor should get advice from the business's attorney and accountant before acting.

Partnership. You own the business with one or more partners. When you die, the partnership agreement should specify what happens to your share. Usually, the surviving partners have the option to buy out your share (either from you or your estate). If there's no partnership agreement, things get messy.

If your business is a separate entity (like a corporation or LLC), your interest in it is usually handled as part of your estate, but exactly how depends on the entity type and any owner agreements in place. Note the structure and where the agreements are kept, and have your executor confirm the specifics with the business's attorney.

Trust. The business is owned by a trust. When you die, the business stays in the trust. But if you're the trustee or Trust Protector, your executor needs to know who takes over those roles.

Do you have a succession plan?

Succession planning means deciding what happens to your business when you die.

Options include:

- Sell to a co-owner or business partner. If you own the business with others, they might want to buy your share. This should be documented in a buy-sell agreement (sometimes called a business succession agreement).
- Sell to a key employee. Maybe your general manager or head of operations wants to take over. Have you discussed this with them?
- Sell to a third party. Your executor finds a buyer and sells the business as a going concern.
- Pass it to a family member. If your son, daughter, or spouse wants to take over, make sure they're prepared and capable. Running a business is hard.
- Wind it down. Close the business, sell the assets, pay the debts, and distribute what's left.

If you don't have a plan, your executor will make the decision for you. And they might not choose what you would have chosen.

What about business debts and liabilities?

If your business owes money (business loans, supplier credit, leases, employee entitlements), your executor needs to pay those debts before distributing anything to beneficiaries.

With some business structures, debts generally sit with the business rather than with you personally, though that protection isn't absolute, especially where you've signed a personal guarantee. Note any guarantees you've given, and have your executor confirm what your estate may be responsible for with the business's attorney.

Include details of all business debts and guarantees here.

WHY THIS MATTERS

A business is often one of the most valuable (and most complicated) assets in an estate.

Without information and a succession plan, your business could lose value rapidly. Key employees might leave. Customers might go elsewhere. Suppliers might cut off credit.

By documenting your business details and expressing your wishes, you're giving your executor the tools to protect your business's value.

You've just saved your business (and your family).

YOUR WISHES FOR YOUR BUSINESS(ES), AND ANYTHING ELSE YOUR EXECUTOR SHOULD KNOW

Other Agreements

Beyond your business, you might have other legal agreements that your executor needs to know about.

Leases. Employment contracts. Vendor finance arrangements. Loan agreements. Prenuptial agreements. These documents create ongoing obligations or entitlements that don't end automatically when you die.

Your executor needs to know what agreements exist, where to find them, and what obligations they create.

What kinds of agreements matter?

Here are some common agreements your executor might need to deal with:

Commercial leases. If you lease commercial property (office, warehouse, retail space) for your business, the lease might continue after you die. Your executor will need to either continue the lease, assign it to someone else, or negotiate an early termination. Include the lease details here.

Residential leases. If you're renting your home, your executor will need to end the lease and organize the security deposit refund. If you're the landlord and you have tenants, that's covered in the Property section.

Employment contracts. If you have a contract with your employer that includes entitlements (severance, notice period, bonuses, share options), your executor needs to know about it. They'll need to claim any outstanding pay, leave, or benefits.

Vendor finance agreements. If you've sold property or a business to someone and they're paying you over time (vendor finance or seller financing), your executor needs to collect the remaining payments. Include the buyer's details and the payment terms.

Loan agreements (money you've lent). If you've lent money to family, friends, or business associates, your executor needs to try to recover it. Include who owes you money, how much, and whether there's a written agreement.

Prenuptial or financial agreements. If you have a prenup or binding financial agreement with your spouse, your executor needs to know. It might affect how your estate is divided.

Buy-sell agreements. Already covered in the Business section, but if you have one, make sure it's noted there.

Franchise agreements. If you own a franchise, the franchise agreement might have specific terms about what happens when you die (e.g., the franchisor might have the right to buy back the franchise).

WHY THIS MATTERS

Agreements create rights and obligations. Your executor needs to enforce your rights (collect money owed to you) and fulfill your obligations (pay what you owe, end leases properly).

If your executor doesn't know an agreement exists, they might miss out on money you're owed, or they might unknowingly breach a contract.

Write it all down. It's worth it.

Government Benefits and Assistance

If you receive any payments from the government, your executor needs to know.

Social Security retirement benefits. Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI). Supplemental Security Income (SSI). Veterans' benefits. State disability benefits. These payments stop when you die, and your executor needs to notify the relevant agencies.

In some cases, payments received after your death need to be paid back. In other cases, there might be final entitlements (like bereavement payments for your spouse).

This section helps your executor know what you're receiving and who to contact.

What government benefits might you receive?

Common government payments in the United States include:

Social Security retirement benefits. If you're over retirement age, you receive Social Security retirement benefits from the Social Security Administration. When you die, your executor must notify the Social Security Administration immediately. Any payments received after your date of death must be repaid.

Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI). For people with a permanent disability who can't work. Same rules as Social Security retirement benefits - must notify the Social Security Administration, repay any payments received after death.

Supplemental Security Income (SSI). If you have limited income and resources and are aged, blind, or disabled. Stops when you die.

Veterans' benefits. If you served in the military, you or your survivors may be eligible for benefits from the Department of Veterans Affairs. The available benefits and how to claim them are set by the VA and can change, so your executor or spouse should check current eligibility directly with the VA.

State disability benefits. If you receive state disability support (such as SSI, SSDI, or state disability programs), your executor needs to notify the relevant state agency.

Child Tax Credit (CTC). If you're receiving Child Tax Credit (CTC) for dependent children, this needs to be updated or transferred if your partner will continue caring for the children.

Unemployment Insurance (UI) or other income support. If you're receiving unemployment benefits or other income support, these stop when you die.

What about bereavement payments?

After your death, your spouse or partner may be eligible for survivor benefits from the Social Security Administration. What's available depends on their situation and your work record, so they should contact the SSA at 1-800-772-1213 to find out exactly what they can claim.

Your executor should advise your spouse to contact the Social Security Administration to see what they're entitled to.

WHY THIS MATTERS

If your executor doesn't notify government agencies promptly, payments will keep being deposited into your bank account. Those payments will need to be repaid, which can be administratively painful.

On the flip side, if your spouse is entitled to bereavement payments and doesn't know to claim them, they'll miss out.

Write down what you're receiving so your executor knows what to do.

Obligations & Risks

What's owed, and what's owed to you - the records that don't disappear.

- 17 Debts and Liabilities
- 18 Loans and Debts Owed to You
- 19 Taxation & Capital Gains Records

Debts and Liabilities

When you die, your debts don't disappear.

Your executor has to pay them from your estate before distributing anything to your beneficiaries. That means selling assets if necessary, using cash in bank accounts, or claiming on insurance policies.

Some debts are secured (like a mortgage, which is secured against your house). If the debt isn't paid, the lender can take the asset.

Other debts are unsecured (like credit cards or personal loans). If your estate doesn't have enough money to pay them, the creditors might miss out.

Your executor needs to know what you owe, who you owe it to, and how much.

What kinds of debts matter?

Here are the most common debts in American estates:

Mortgages. Already covered in the Property section, but worth noting again. If you have a mortgage, your executor needs to either pay it off, keep making repayments until the property sells, or transfer the property (with the mortgage) to a beneficiary.

Credit cards. Your executor needs to notify the bank, pay off the balance, and cancel the card. If you have multiple credit cards, list them all.

Personal loans. Bank loans, peer-to-peer loans, or loans from finance companies. Include the lender, account number, and outstanding balance.

Car loans or equipment finance. If you're still paying off a car, RV, boat, or equipment, your executor needs to either pay it off or transfer it to a beneficiary who takes over the payments.

Federal student loans are generally discharged when the borrower dies, though the loan servicer will need a death certificate to process it, and private student loans usually are not discharged. Note any student loans here, and your executor can confirm what applies with the loan servicer and your accountant.

Buy now, pay later accounts. Klarna, Affirm, Afterpay, etc. If you have outstanding balances on these accounts, your executor needs to pay them off and close the accounts.

Tax debts. If you owe money to the IRS (unpaid income tax, sales tax, or penalties), your executor must If you owe money to the IRS, that generally needs to be dealt with before the estate is distributed, and tax debts often rank ahead of other debts. The exact order in which debts must be paid is set by law and can be complex, so your executor should work this out with the estate's accountant or attorney.

Personal guarantees. If you've guaranteed someone else's debt (for example, you guaranteed your child's business loan or your spouse's credit card), your estate might be liable if they default. Include details of any personal guarantees you've given.

Liens or judgments. If someone has sued you and won a judgment, or if there's a lien against your property, your executor needs to know. These debts must be paid before the property can be sold or transferred.

What about joint debts?

If you share a loan with someone, the debt usually doesn't disappear when you die, and the other borrower often remains responsible for it. The details can vary by state and by how the loan was set up, so the surviving borrower should confirm where they stand with the lender.

But if there's life insurance attached to the loan, it might pay out the balance when you die. Make sure your executor knows if you have loan protection insurance.

WHY THIS MATTERS

If your executor doesn't know about a debt, they might distribute your estate to beneficiaries and then discover the debt later. That creates a mess - they might have to claw money back from beneficiaries to pay creditors.

By documenting all your debts, you're making sure everything is paid in the right order and nothing is missed.

You've just prevented a major headache for your executor.

Loans and Debts Owed to You

If you've lent money to anyone, your executor needs to try to recover it.

Maybe you lent your daughter $20,000 for a house deposit. Maybe you helped a friend with a $5,000 loan when they were struggling. Maybe you're owed money from a business deal that went sideways.

Whatever the situation, these debts are assets of your estate. Your executor should attempt to collect them (if it's practical and appropriate to do so).

This section helps your executor know who owes you money and whether there's any documentation to back it up.

When should your executor try to recover debts?

Not all debts are worth pursuing. Here's how to think about it:

If there's a written agreement and the amount is significant, your executor should pursue it. If you lent someone $50,000 and there's a signed loan agreement, your executor should collect that money for your estate.

If it's a verbal agreement with family, use judgment. If you lent your son $10,000 for university and he's been slowly paying you back, your executor might choose to forgive the remaining balance rather than create family conflict. But if the amount is large, they might need to pursue it.

If the debt is uncollectable, don't waste time and money. If you lent someone $2,000 ten years ago and they've disappeared, it's probably not worth hiring a lawyer to chase it.

Your executor will use their discretion, but they need to know what's owed to you first.

What about informal family loans?

Family loans are tricky.

Maybe you gave your daughter $30,000 "for a house deposit" but you never clarified whether it was a loan or a gift. Maybe you've been helping your son with rent for years and he says he'll "pay you back someday."

If you want these treated as loans (to be repaid to your estate), document them here and clarify the terms. Otherwise, your executor will assume they were gifts and won't pursue repayment.

If you want to forgive a family loan when you die, say so in your Will. For example: "I forgive the $20,000 loan I made to my daughter Sarah in 2020."

WHY THIS MATTERS

Money you're owed is an asset. If your estate is owed $50,000 and your executor doesn't know about it, that's $50,000 your beneficiaries will never receive.

On the flip side, if you don't document informal family loans, your executor might create conflict by demanding repayment when you intended the money to be a gift.

Write it down. Be clear.

Taxation & Capital Gains Records

Your executor has to file your final tax return.

Your executor will need to file a final personal tax return covering the year you die, reporting your income up to your date of death, and there may also be a separate return for the estate. The exact forms and periods are technical, so your accountant should handle the filings.

They'll need to report all your income (salary, investment income, rental income, etc.) and claim all your deductions. Then they'll pay any tax owing or claim any refund due.

To do this, your executor needs access to your tax records, your accountant's details, and information about your capital gains tax history.

This section helps them gather what they need.

What is capital gains tax ?

Selling an asset for more than you paid can create a capital gain that's taxable, but there are important exceptions, and assets passing at death are often treated differently (their tax 'cost' can be reset to date-of-death value). Because this gets technical, leave the calculations to your accountant and just keep your records so they have what they need.

But calculating CAPITAL GAINS TAX can be complicated. You need to know: - When you bought the asset (the acquisition date) - What you paid for it (the cost basis) - What you've spent improving it (renovation costs, transaction costs) - When you sold it (if you sold it before you died)

If you've owned investment properties, shares, or other assets for decades, your executor will need this information to calculate any CAPITAL GAINS TAX owing when the asset is sold.

What records does your executor need?

Here's what your executor will need to file your final tax return and deal with CAPITAL GAINS TAX:

Your previous tax returns are useful for your executor and accountant. How many years' worth to keep depends on your situation (property records in particular may need to be kept much longer), so ask your accountant what's right for you.

Your Social Security Number (SSN). Already covered in Personal Information, but worth noting again.

Your accountant's details. If you use an accountant or tax preparer, include their contact details. They'll have copies of your past returns and can help your executor.

Records of capital gains and losses. If you've sold shares, property, or other assets in the past, your executor needs to know the cost basis and acquisition dates for any assets you still own.

Receipts for major expenses. If you've renovated an investment property or made capital improvements, those costs can be added to the cost basis (reducing CAPITAL GAINS TAX). Keep records.

Your IRS Online Account login details. Your executor will need access to your IRS Online Account to file your final tax return online, check your tax debt/refund status, and access IRS records. Store your login details securely (not in this book).

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your estate generally can't be wrapped up until the required tax returns are filed and any tax is paid. Most estates don't owe federal estate tax at all, but the filing requirements depend on the size and makeup of your estate, so your accountant or attorney can confirm what's actually needed in your case.

And if your executor doesn't have Capital gains records, they might overpay tax (because they can't prove what you paid for an asset) or underpay tax (and face penalties).

Give them the information they need. It'll save your estate thousands of dollars.

RETIREMENT SAVINGS TAX RECORDS NOTE

Prose: Retirement accounts like a 401(k) or IRA are taxed differently from your other assets, and who pays the tax (and when) depends on who inherits and what type of account it is. This can create a meaningful tax bill for some beneficiaries, so your accountant should handle the calculation. Just make sure your executor knows where the accounts are and who's named on them. Your accountant will handle the calculation, but your executor should be aware this can create a significant tax liability. Your executor doesn't need to calculate this (your retirement plan does), but they should know to check with the fund about tax implications.

Digital Assets & Online Accounts

Your digital life is more complicated than you think.

You probably have dozens of online accounts. Email. Social media. Cloud storage. Banking apps. Streaming services. Online shopping accounts. Loyalty programs. Newsletters you signed up for in 2014.

When you die, your executor needs to:

- Access your email to notify contacts and close accounts
- Recover important files from cloud storage
- Close or memorialize your social media accounts
- Cancel subscriptions so your estate isn't charged monthly fees forever
- Access photos, documents, and other digital assets your family might want

But here's the problem: most of these accounts are password-protected, and many have two-factor authentication (2FA) that sends a code to your phone. If your executor can't unlock your phone or access your email, they're locked out.

This section helps you document your digital life so your executor can actually access it.

How should you store passwords?

Do NOT write your actual passwords in this book. If this book is lost or stolen, someone could access your entire digital life.

Instead, use one of these methods:

Password manager. Apps like 1Password, Bitwarden, or LastPass store all your passwords securely. Your executor just needs the master password to access everything. This is the best option.

Encrypted file. Store your passwords in an encrypted file on your computer or in cloud storage. Give your executor the decryption key (stored separately from this book).

With your lawyer. Some lawyers will store a sealed envelope with your passwords. Your executor can collect it after you die.

In a safe. Write your passwords on paper and store them in a fireproof safe at home. Tell your executor the combination.

Whatever method you choose, note it here so your executor knows where to find your passwords.

What about two-factor authentication (2FA)?

Two-factor authentication is great for security, but it's a nightmare for executors.

If your accounts use 2FA, your executor will need:

- Access to your phone (to receive SMS codes)
- Access to your authenticator app (Google Authenticator, Microsoft Authenticator, etc.)
- Access to your email (if 2FA codes are sent there)

Make sure your executor can unlock your phone. If your phone is locked with a PIN, fingerprint, or face recognition, they'll be locked out unless you share access details.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your executor can't close your email account, access your cloud storage, or cancel your subscriptions if they can't log in.

Without access to your digital accounts, your family might lose precious photos, important documents, or financial records. And your estate might keep paying for subscriptions you're no longer using.

Document your digital life. It's worth it.

NOTES: ANYTHING ELSE ABOUT YOUR DIGITAL ASSETS

Cryptocurrency & Digital Wallets

If you own cryptocurrency, your executor needs to know about it.

Bitcoin. Ethereum. Other altcoins. NFTs. These digital assets can be worth thousands or even millions of dollars. But they're also the easiest assets to lose forever.

Unlike a bank account, where your executor can contact the bank and prove they're your executor, cryptocurrency is controlled entirely by private keys and recovery phrases. If your executor doesn't have access to those keys, the crypto is gone. No bank. No customer service. No way to recover it.

This section helps your executor understand what crypto you own and how to access it.

How does cryptocurrency work (in simple terms)?

Cryptocurrency is stored in digital wallets. Think of a wallet like a bank account, but instead of the bank controlling it, you control it with a private key or recovery phrase.

There are two main types of wallets:

Exchange wallets (custodial). You store your crypto on an exchange like Coinbase, Kraken, Binance, or Coinbase. The exchange holds your crypto for you, and you log in with a username and password (just like online banking). Your executor can access this if they have your login details.

Personal wallets (non-custodial). You store your crypto in a software wallet (app on your phone or computer) or a hardware wallet (physical device like a Ledger or Trezor). You control the crypto with a recovery phrase (usually 12-24 words). If your executor doesn't have the recovery phrase, the crypto is lost forever. There's no "forgot password" option.

What's a recovery phrase?

A recovery phrase (also called a seed phrase) is a list of 12-24 words that acts as the master key to your wallet.

For example: "apple pasta banana mountain river dog tree..." (12-24 random words).

If you have the recovery phrase, you can access the wallet from any device. If you lose it, the crypto is gone forever. No one can help you recover it. Not even the wallet company.

This is why it's critical to store your recovery phrase securely and tell your executor where to find it.

Where should you store your recovery phrase?

DO NOT write it in this book. If someone finds this book, they could steal all your crypto.

Instead:

- Write it on paper and store it in a fireproof safe at home
- Store it in a safety deposit box at a bank
- Use a metal backup device designed for recovery phrases (fireproof and waterproof)
- Store it with your lawyer in a sealed envelope
- Split it into parts and give each part to a trusted person (advanced option)

Whatever method you choose, note the location here so your executor knows where to find it.

What about exchanges?

If you store crypto on an exchange (Coinbase, Kraken, Binance, Coinbase, etc.), your executor can access it like any other online account. They'll need:

- Your login email and password
- Access to your two-factor authentication (2FA) code

Make sure your executor can access your 2FA (either through your phone or authenticator app).

WHY THIS MATTERS

Cryptocurrency is one of the most commonly lost assets in estates.

People die with Bitcoin worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, and their families never recover it because no one knew it existed or no one could find the recovery phrase.

If you own crypto, document it. Tell your executor where to find the keys. Don't let it disappear.

Your Cryptocurrency & Digital Wallets

Crypto vanishes without the keys. Note where everything is, but never the keys themselves.

Devices & Access

Your devices hold your entire digital life.

Your phone has your emails, messages, photos, banking apps, and two-factor authentication codes. Your computer has files, documents, and years of work. Your tablet might have books, notes, and important PDFs.

When you die, your executor needs to access these devices to:

- Retrieve important files and photos
- Close online accounts
- Notify contacts
- Cancel subscriptions
- Access two-factor authentication codes

But most devices are locked with PINs, passwords, fingerprints, or face recognition. If your executor can't unlock them, they're locked out of your entire digital life.

This section helps your executor access your devices and recover what matters.

The problem with device security:

Modern devices are designed to be secure. That's great while you're alive. But when you die, that security becomes a problem.

If your phone is locked with Face ID and no one knows your PIN, your executor can't get in. Apple won't unlock it. Google won't unlock it. The device is effectively a brick.

Same with computers. If your laptop is password-protected and encrypted, and no one has the password, the data is gone forever.

You need to give your executor a way in.

How to give your executor access:

Here are your options:

Write down device PINs and passwords and store them securely. In a safe. With your lawyer. In a password manager. Just not in this book.

Add a trusted contact to your Apple ID or Google account. Apple allows you to designate a Legacy Contact who can access your iCloud data after you die. Google has an Inactive Account Manager that lets you specify what happens to your account if you stop using it.

Make sure your executor can unlock at least one device. If they can unlock your phone, they can access your email and 2FA codes, which gets them into everything else.

Tell your executor where your devices are. If you have a laptop in a drawer, a tablet in the study, or an old phone in storage, they need to know where to find them.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your executor can't do their job if they can't access your devices.

They can't notify contacts. They can't close accounts. They can't recover photos. They can't access banking apps. They're stuck.

By documenting your devices and providing access, you're giving them the keys to your digital life.

Social Media & Memorialization Wishes

Your social media accounts tell the story of your life.

Years of photos. Posts about your kids. Updates about your travels. Messages with friends. Memories shared with people you love.

When you die, these accounts don't disappear automatically. They stay online unless someone closes them. And deciding what happens to them can be complicated and emotional for your family.

This section helps you tell your executor what you want done with your digital presence after you're gone.

What are your options?

For most social media platforms, you have three choices:

Memorialize the account. The account becomes a memorial page. People can still see your posts and photos, but no one can log in or post new content. Your profile might say "Remembering [Your Name]" and friends can leave tributes. This preserves your digital legacy.

Delete the account permanently. Everything is deleted. Your profile, photos, posts, messages - all gone. Some people prefer this because they don't want their digital life preserved after they're gone.

Leave it as is. Do nothing. The account stays active (but no one can access it because they don't have your password). Eventually, platforms may deactivate inactive accounts, but it could take years.

What do different platforms offer?

Here's what happens on major platforms:

Facebook. You can set up a Legacy Contact (someone who can manage your memorialized account). They can update your profile picture, respond to friend requests, and pin a tribute post. They can't log in as you or see your private messages. Alternatively, you can request your account be deleted when you die.

Instagram. Instagram will memorialize accounts if a family member requests it. Memorialized accounts say "Remembering" above the name. Or family can request deletion.

LinkedIn. LinkedIn will close your account when notified of your death. They don't offer memorialization.

Twitter / X. Twitter will deactivate accounts after a prolonged period of inactivity, or family can request deletion. They don't offer memorialization.

TikTok. TikTok will remove accounts when notified of a death. They don't offer memorialization.

YouTube. YouTube accounts are linked to Google accounts. If you set up Google's Inactive Account Manager, you can specify what happens to your YouTube channel (share with someone, or delete).

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your social media accounts are part of your legacy.

For some people, having their account memorialized is meaningful. Their family can revisit memories, see photos, and feel connected. For others, it feels invasive or uncomfortable, and they'd rather have everything deleted.

There's no right answer. It's personal. But your executor needs to know what you want.

Otherwise, they'll have to guess. And that's hard to do when they're grieving.

Foreign Assets & International Considerations

If you have assets overseas, dual citizenship, or international connections, your estate becomes more complicated.

Maybe you own property in Mexico. Maybe you have bank accounts in the UK. Maybe you're a dual citizen with ties to another country. Maybe you have family in another country who'll inherit from you.

When you die, your executor will need to deal with multiple legal systems, different tax rules, and potentially conflicting laws.

This section helps your executor understand your international situation and know who to contact for help.

Why are foreign assets complicated?

Because every country has its own rules about estates, taxation, and inheritance.

For example: - Foreign assets can be tricky, because every country has its own rules about who inherits, how things are taxed, and whether a separate probate is needed overseas. Some countries also limit who you can leave assets to. None of that is something to work out from this book, so the main job here is simply to write down what you own abroad and who your executor should call. A lawyer who handles cross-border estates can explain how the rules actually apply to your situation.

Your executor will need specialist advice to work through these issues. But first, they need to know what foreign assets and connections exist.

Do you need multiple Wills?

If you have significant assets in another country, you might need two Wills: - A US Will (covering your domestic assets) - A foreign Will (covering your overseas assets)

This is common for people who own property in multiple countries. The foreign Will deals with the overseas property under that country's laws, and the US Will deals with everything else.

But be careful: if you have multiple Wills, they must be carefully drafted so they don't accidentally revoke each other.

Your lawyer (and a lawyer in the other country) can help with this.

What about dual citizenship?

If you're a dual citizen, your executor needs to know. Some countries have special inheritance rules for their citizens, even if they live abroad.

For example: - Citizenship can matter when someone dies, because some countries have special tax or inheritance rules tied to where you're a citizen, even if you live somewhere else. The details vary a lot, so the useful thing here is to note your citizenship clearly and let your executor get specialist advice on what, if anything, needs to be filed.

Include your citizenship details here so your executor knows to get specialist advice.

What about currency and exchange rates?

If you have foreign bank accounts or assets, your executor will need to convert foreign currency to US dollars at some point.

Exchange rates fluctuate. Your executor should get advice on the best time to convert (and whether there are tax implications).

WHY THIS MATTERS

International estates can take years to sort out if your executor doesn't have the right information and professional help.

Assets can get stuck in foreign legal systems. Tax bills can appear from unexpected countries. And your beneficiaries might wait far longer than they should.

By documenting your foreign assets and connections, you're giving your executor a roadmap to work through the complexity.

Household Utilities & Services

When you die, your household doesn't just stop.

Bills keep arriving. Services keep running. Utilities keep charging. Your executor needs to cancel or transfer everything to prevent your estate from being charged for months after you're gone.

This section covers all the essential household services your executor will need to deal with.

Electricity. Gas. Water. Internet. Phone. Property tax. Security systems. Waste collection.

For each service, your executor needs to know the provider, the account number, and how to contact them.

WHY THIS MATTERS

If your executor doesn't know who your electricity provider is, they'll have to wait for a bill to arrive. If they can't find your property tax bill, they won't know when the next payment is due. If they don't have your internet account details, they might not be able to cancel it for months.

Every service that runs unnecessarily costs your estate money.

By documenting your household services, you're saving them time and saving your estate unnecessary costs.

Let's get it down.

Memberships & Subscriptions

You probably have more memberships and subscriptions than you realize.

Gym membership. Professional associations. Club memberships. Magazine subscriptions. Loyalty programs. Associations. Newsletters.

Some charge monthly. Some charge annually. Some auto-renew without you even noticing.

When you die, these don't cancel automatically. They keep charging your bank account or credit card until someone notices and cancels them.

Your executor needs to know what memberships you have so they can cancel them and stop the charges.

This section is different from the digital subscriptions we covered earlier (Netflix, Spotify, etc.). This is about physical memberships - places you go, organizations you belong to, and services you use in person.

WHY THIS MATTERS

If your executor doesn't know you have a gym membership, your estate might pay $60 a month for a year before someone notices. If they don't know you're a member of a professional association, they might miss out on death benefits or insurance that comes with membership.

By documenting your memberships, you're saving your estate money and making sure nothing is missed.

Let's write them down.

Caregiving Commitments

If you're caring for someone, your executor needs to know.

Maybe you're caring for an elderly parent. Maybe you have an adult child with a disability who lives with you. Maybe you're the Primary Caregiver for a spouse with dementia.

When you die, someone else will need to step in and provide that care. Your executor needs to know who you're caring for, what their needs are, and who should take over.

This section also helps if you're receiving Caregiver benefits from Social Security. Your executor will need to notify Social Security, and the person you're caring for might be eligible for other support.

WHY THIS MATTERS

If you're the Primary Caregiver for someone and you die unexpectedly, that person could be left without support. Your family might not know what medications they take, who their doctors are, or what daily care they need.

By documenting your caregiving commitments, you're making sure the person you care for continues to receive the support they need.

Let's write it down.

Pet Care Instructions

If you have pets, your executor needs to know what happens to them.

Dogs. Cats. Birds. Fish. Horses. Reptiles. Whatever animals share your home, they can't stay there after you're gone.

Your executor needs to know who should take them, where they are, what they need, and how to care for them until they're rehomed.

This section is about making sure your pets are looked after when you can't look after them anymore.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Pets don't understand what's happened. They just know their person is gone.

If your executor doesn't know what to do with your dog, it might end up in a shelter. If they don't know your cat has a medical condition, they might not give it the right medication. If they don't know who you wanted to take your pets, they'll have to guess.

By documenting your pet care instructions, you're making sure your animals go to someone who loves them and knows how to care for them.

Let's make sure they're looked after.

Household “How-To” Notes

Your house has secrets that only you know.

The alarm code. The safe combination. Where the spare keys are hidden. How to reset the hot water system. Which switch controls what. Where the water shut-off valve is.

When you die, your executor needs to access your home, secure it, and maintain it until it's sold or transferred. But if they don't know the alarm code, they can't get in without triggering it. If they don't know where the spare keys are, they might have to call a locksmith. If they don't know how the house works, they could cause damage or miss important maintenance.

This section is about the practical knowledge that keeps your house running.

It's not glamorous. But it's incredibly useful.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your executor might need to enter your house the day after you die. If the alarm goes off and they don't know the code, the police show up. If they can't find the spare key, they're stuck outside. If a pipe bursts and they don't know where the water shut-off is, your house floods.

By documenting these practical details, you're saving your executor from unnecessary stress and potential damage to your property.

Let's write down the things only you know.

Supporting Documents

Where the paperwork lives - the documents your family will need to find fast.

30 Legal Documents

31 Miscellaneous Documents

Legal Documents

Your executor will need access to various legal documents to settle your estate.

Some of these are essential (your Will, your beneficiary designation, your Power of Attorney). Others might only be relevant in specific situations (divorce orders, prenuptial agreements, guardianship orders).

This section is a checklist of legal documents your executor should know about. For each one, note whether you have it and where it's stored.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Legal documents prove things. They prove you were divorced. They prove you have a binding agreement with your spouse. They prove you have legal authority over someone's care.

If your executor doesn't know these documents exist, they might make decisions based on incomplete information. Or they might spend weeks searching for something they need urgently.

Let's document what you have and where it is.

Miscellaneous Documents

This section is the catch-all for important documents that don't fit neatly into other categories.

Safe deposit box details. Personal safe access. Adoption records. Naturalization certificates. Military service records. Educational certificates. Professional licenses.

These documents might not be legally essential, but they could be important for proving identity, claiming benefits, or understanding your personal history.

Your executor needs to know what documents exist and where to find them.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Some of these documents unlock benefits. Military service records might qualify your family for veterans' benefits. Professional licenses might include death benefits. Safe deposit boxes might contain valuable items or important papers.

If your executor doesn't know these exist, your family could miss out on benefits or lose track of important personal history.

Let's document what you have.

Legacy & Family Continuity

The part only you can write - your story, your values, your words for later.

- 34 Share Your Story & Family History
- 35 Values & Principles

Special Requests

Your Will distributes your assets legally. But it doesn't cover everything.

Maybe you want your daughter to have your wedding ring. Maybe you want your son to get your guitar. Maybe you want your collection of vintage records to go to your best friend who actually appreciates them.

Maybe you want certain family recipes preserved. Maybe you want a specific poem read at your funeral. Maybe you want to make sure your grandchildren know the story of how their grandparents met.

This section is for those special requests.

WHY THIS MATTERS

These requests aren't legally binding (unless they're in your Will). But they carry weight because they're written in your own words.

Your executor and family will see what mattered to you. They'll know who you wanted to have what. And most families honor these wishes because it's clear they came from you.

This is your chance to make sure the things that matter to you end up with the people who will treasure them.

Let's write them down.

Notes & Legacy Letters

This might be the most important section in this entire book.

Your bank accounts will be distributed. Your house will be sold. Your debts will be paid. All the practical things will get sorted out.

But the words you leave behind? Those last forever.

This section is for the things you want to say to the people you love. The advice you want to give. The apologies you need to make. The gratitude you want to express. The stories you want preserved.

You can write letters to specific people. Or you can write general notes that everyone can read. Or both.

There's no right way to do this. Just write what's in your heart.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Years from now, your grandchildren will read these words and feel like they knew you. Your children will come back to this when they need guidance. Your spouse will find comfort in knowing what you wanted them to know.

Money and property get spent and sold. But words endure.

This is your chance to say the things that matter most.

Your Notes & Legacy Letters

Letters in your own hand mean more than anything else in this book. Take a whole page for each.

Every life is a story. This section is where you tell yours. Not just the dates and facts - the real stuff. Where you came from. What you lived through. Who you loved. What you built. What you learned the hard way. Your grandchildren will want to know what shaped you. Your children will want to understand what made you who you were. And the details that feel ordinary to you right now - what your street looked like, what your first job paid, what the world was like when you were twenty - will be fascinating to someone reading this fifty years from now. Your family's journey. Your achievements. The moments that shaped you. The humour that kept you going. The wisdom you've gained. This is where you put it all down. Take your time with this section. There are no wrong answers.

Values & Principles

What do you believe in?

Not what religion you follow (though that might be part of it). Not what political party you support. But the deeper things. The values that guided your decisions. The principles you tried to live by. The lessons you learned the hard way.

This section is about the core of who you are.

What matters most to you? What did you stand for? What would you never compromise on? What do you wish you'd known when you were younger?

Your grandchildren will want to know what you believed. Your children will want to know what shaped your decisions. Your family will want to understand what made you who you were.

This is your chance to tell them.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Values are portable. Your house will be sold. Your money will be distributed. But the principles you lived by can be carried forward by your children and grandchildren.

If you write them down, they become part of your legacy. They guide your family when they face hard decisions. They remind them of who you were and what you stood for.

That's worth preserving.

Let's write down what you believe.

The beliefs and lessons you want to outlast you. Write as much as feels right.

Family Traditions

Every family has traditions.

Maybe it's how you celebrate Christmas. Maybe it's Sunday dinner at Grandma's house. Maybe it's a particular phrase your dad always said. Maybe it's the way you celebrate birthdays, or the place you always go on holiday, or the recipe that gets passed down.

These traditions are the threads that tie your family together across generations.

When you're gone, some of these traditions might continue. Others might fade. But if you don't write them down, your grandchildren won't even know they existed.

This section is about preserving those traditions so they can be carried forward - or at least remembered.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Traditions create belonging. They connect your family to its past and give your grandchildren a sense of where they come from.

When your great-granddaughter makes your grandmother's Christmas pudding recipe, she's connected to four generations. When your grandson says the funny phrase you always said, he's keeping you alive.

But only if someone writes it down.

Let's preserve your family's traditions.

Letters to Future Generations

This is your chance to speak directly to people you might never meet.

Your great-grandchildren. Your great-great-grandchildren. The descendants who will live 50, 75, 100 years from now.

They won't know you. They'll never hear your voice or see your face (except in old photos). But if you write to them now, they'll know who you were and what you cared about.

This section is for those letters.

You can write about your life. You can share advice. You can tell them what the world was like in your time. You can describe your hopes for the future. You can tell them about their ancestors.

There's no right way to do this. Just write what feels important.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Imagine if your great-great-grandmother had written you a letter. Imagine reading her words, hearing her thoughts, knowing what she hoped for you.

That's what you're creating now.

These letters will be read long after you're gone. They'll connect people across time. They'll give your descendants a sense of who they are and where they came from.

That's a powerful gift.

Let's write to the future.

Executor Toolkit

For whoever steps up - a clear path through the first days and the months after.

- 39 Executor Timeline
- 40 Common Executor Pitfalls & How to Avoid Them
- 41 Executor Expense Log Template
- 42 Notification Templates

Executor Roadmap & First 48 Hours Checklist

The first 48 hours after a death are chaotic.

Your executor will be dealing with their own grief while also handling urgent practical matters. They need to secure property, notify key people, and start organizing paperwork.

This checklist helps them prioritize what needs to happen immediately and what can wait.

The first 48 hours: Secure, Notify, Record

Your Executor Roadmap & First 48 Hours Checklist

A step-by-step path through the first hours and days, so nothing urgent is missed.

WITHIN THE FIRST FEW HOURS

- Secure the person's home (lock up, set alarm, collect mail, pets, plants)
- Locate the Will (check Part 2; contact the lawyer who drafted it)
- Locate this Estate Organizer and read the Message to Your Executor
- Contact immediate family (see Key Contacts)

WITHIN THE FIRST 24 HOURS

- Obtain the Death certificate
- Register the death (your funeral director usually handles this; how it works and the timing vary by state, so check with them, and it's worth ordering a few certified copies of the death certificate, as several organizations will ask for one)
- Contact the funeral director (check the Funeral chapter for wishes)
- Notify the deceased's employer (final pay, leave, retirement savings)
- Secure valuable items (jewelry, cash, documents) and record them

WITHIN THE FIRST 48 HOURS

- Notify close friends (see Key Contacts)
- Contact the lawyer
- Contact insurance companies (if death benefits apply)
- Arrange care for dependents
- Arrange care for pets
- Cancel immediate appointments
- Start a death administration notebook

NOTES: WHAT'S BEEN DONE, AND WHAT STILL NEEDS DOING

Executor Timeline

The work doesn't end after the first week. Settling an estate typically takes 6-12 months (sometimes longer if it's complicated).

This timeline breaks down what needs to happen at each stage: the first week, the first month, the first three months, and the first year.

Use this as a guide, not a strict schedule. Every estate is different. Some things will take longer than expected. Some will move faster. That's normal.

Your timeline: What to expect and when

Your Executor Timeline

What to do and when, from the first week through to the end of the first year.

THE FIRST WEEK

- Secure the property and valuables
- Register the death (usually handled by your funeral director; timeframes vary by state, and order multiple certificates)
- Arrange the funeral
- Locate the Will and this Estate Organizer
- Contact the lawyer
- Notify immediate family and close friends
- Secure all financial documents
- Start keeping detailed records

THE FIRST MONTH

- Apply for probate if it's required (whether you need it, and how long it takes, varies by state, so check your state's probate court or ask the lawyer what applies)
- Notify all relevant organizations (banks, retirement savings, Social Security, insurers)
- Cancel or transfer services
- Secure and value all assets
- Identify all debts
- Claim life insurance
- Claim retirement plan (401(k)/IRA) death benefits
- Keep paying urgent bills

THE FIRST THREE MONTHS

Obtain Letters Testamentary (if applicable)

Open an estate bank account

Collect all assets

Pay debts in the order that applies in your state (the priority of different debts varies, and paying them in the wrong order can create problems, so confirm the order with the lawyer first)

File the final tax return

Deal with property

Manage business interests (if applicable)

Cancel digital accounts (if instructed)

THE FIRST SIX MONTHS

Prepare estate accounts

Obtain IRS clearance

Prepare distribution schedule

Communicate with beneficiaries

THE FIRST YEAR

Distribute the estate

Finalize estate accounts

Close the estate bank account

Retain records

If you're entitled to a fee for acting as executor, claim it properly. Whether you can be paid, and how much, depends on your state, the Will, and sometimes the beneficiaries or the court, so check with the lawyer first and keep it documented.

NOTES: PROGRESS, DATES, AND ANYTHING OUTSTANDING

Common Executor Pitfalls & How to Avoid Them

Being an executor is harder than most people think.

There are legal requirements, financial complexities, and emotional landmines. It's easy to make mistakes, especially when you're grieving and under pressure from family.

This section covers the most common pitfalls executors face and how to avoid them.

Learn from other people's mistakes so you don't have to make them yourself.

PITFALL 1: Distributing assets too soon

THE MISTAKE: Executors sometimes distribute assets to beneficiaries before all debts are paid and all claims are settled. Then a creditor appears, or a tax bill arrives, and there's no money left to pay it.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Don't distribute anything until you have IRS clearance
- Wait until all debts are paid
- Wait until the required creditor-notice period for your state expires
- Keep a reserve in the estate account for unexpected expenses
- If there's any pressure to distribute early, talk to the lawyer first. Beneficiary agreement on its own may not protect you if a debt or tax bill turns up later, so get advice before releasing anything ahead of time.

PITFALL 2: Not keeping detailed records

THE MISTAKE: Executors fail to document their actions, expenses, and decisions. Later, beneficiaries question what happened, and the executor can't prove what they did or why.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Start a detailed record-keeping system from day one
- Document every phone call, letter, email, and meeting
- Keep all receipts for expenses (even small ones)
- Take photos of property before selling or distributing
- Keep copies of everything
- Use Section 41 (Executor Expense Log) to track costs

PITFALL 3: Paying debts in the wrong order

THE MISTAKE: Not all debts are equal. Some must be paid first (like funeral costs and tax debts). Executors who pay debts in the wrong order can be held personally liable.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Work with a lawyer to understand debt priority
- Some debts have to be paid before others, and getting the order wrong can leave you personally on the hook. The exact priority is set by your state's law, so don't work it out from a general list. Ask the lawyer to confirm the correct order for this estate before you pay anyone.
- Don't pay anyone until you know the full picture

PITFALL 4: Mixing personal and estate funds

THE MISTAKE: Executors use their own money to pay estate expenses, or they deposit estate money into their personal account. This creates confusion and can look like mismanagement.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Open a separate estate bank account immediately
- All estate income goes into this account
- All estate expenses are paid from this account
- Never mix it with your personal finances
- Keep the estate account separate until the estate is fully settled

PITFALL 5: Acting without probate when it's required

THE MISTAKE: Some executors try to access bank accounts, sell property, or distribute assets before getting Letters Testamentary. Banks and institutions won't cooperate, and it wastes time.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Check with the lawyer whether probate is needed
- If required, apply for it before trying to access assets
- Smaller estates sometimes qualify for a simpler process instead of full probate, but whether this estate does depends on your state's rules, so check with the lawyer.
- Wait for the Grant before taking action on major assets

PITFALL 6: Ignoring or delaying communication with beneficiaries

THE MISTAKE: Executors go silent. Beneficiaries don't know what's happening, assume the worst, and start making accusations or legal threats.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Send regular updates to beneficiaries (monthly or quarterly)
- Be transparent about timelines and delays
- Explain what you're doing and why
- Manage expectations (estates take time)
- Respond to questions promptly

PITFALL 7: Taking on too much alone

THE MISTAKE: Executors try to do everything themselves to save money. They get overwhelmed, make mistakes, and the estate takes years to settle.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Hire a lawyer. Yes, it costs money, but it's worth it.
- Use an accountant for tax matters
- Engage professionals for valuations (property, business, collectibles)
- Don't be a hero. This is too complex to do alone.

PITFALL 8: Selling assets too quickly (or too slowly)

THE MISTAKE: Executors panic-sell property at a loss because they feel pressured. Or they delay selling for years, racking up maintenance costs and frustrating beneficiaries.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Get professional valuations before selling anything
- Consult beneficiaries about major sales (if appropriate)
- Don't rush, but don't delay unnecessarily
- Consider market conditions (especially for property)
- Check the Will for specific instructions about selling

PITFALL 9: Not advertising for creditors

THE MISTAKE: Executors forget to advertise for creditors. A creditor appears after the estate is distributed, and the executor is personally liable.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Your lawyer will handle this
- Required by law in most states
- Advertise in newspapers and online
- required notice period for creditor claims (length varies by state)
- Don't distribute until the period expires

PITFALL 10: Paying themselves without documentation

THE MISTAKE: Executors take a fee without documenting it or getting beneficiary approval. Beneficiaries accuse them of theft.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Executors can usually be paid for their work, but how the fee is worked out depends on your state, the Will, and sometimes the court. Document your time, be transparent with the beneficiaries, and check with the lawyer what a reasonable fee looks like in your state before claiming anything.
- Document your time and effort
- Get written approval from beneficiaries before taking a fee
- Be transparent about what you're claiming
- Consult your lawyer about reasonable fees

PITFALL 11: Assuming the Will is clear when it's not

THE MISTAKE: The Will says "divide my estate equally among my children," but one child is estranged, or one was already given money during life. Executors guess what the deceased meant.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- If the Will is unclear, get legal advice
- Don't interpret it yourself
- Courts can provide guidance on ambiguous Wills
- Check this organizer for additional context (especially Part 8)

PITFALL 12: Not dealing with digital assets

THE MISTAKE: Executors forget about online accounts, subscriptions, cryptocurrency, and digital photos. The estate keeps getting charged, or valuable assets are lost.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Check Sections 20-23 for digital asset details
- Cancel subscriptions to stop charges
- Access cryptocurrency with recovery phrases (don't lose them)
- Download photos and important files before closing accounts

PITFALL 13: Letting family pressure influence decisions

THE MISTAKE: A beneficiary pressures the executor to give them "their share" early, or to interpret the Will in their favor. The executor caves to keep the peace.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Your job is to follow the Will, not make everyone happy
- Don't be pushed into handing out anything early. If there's pressure to distribute ahead of time, check with the lawyer what's allowed in your state before you do.
- Don't let anyone bully you
- Refer difficult family members to the lawyer
- Document any pressure or threats

PITFALL 14: Not valuing assets properly

THE MISTAKE: Executors guess at asset values instead of getting professional valuations. This causes disputes and potential tax issues.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Get professional valuations for:
 - Property
 - Vehicles
 - Businesses
 - Collectibles
 - Jewelry
 - Art
- Keep valuation reports for your records
- Use valuations as of the date of death

PITFALL 15: Missing tax deadlines

THE MISTAKE: Executors don't realize the final tax return is due, or they miss the deadline. The IRS charges penalties and interest.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Work with the accountant (Section 19 has details)
- There's usually a final personal tax return to file after a death, and there can be deadlines that matter. The exact forms and due dates depend on the timing and the estate, so work with the accountant early so nothing is missed.
- Don't distribute the estate until you have IRS clearance
- Keep funds in reserve for potential tax bills

PITFALL 16: Not understanding retirement savings

THE MISTAKE: Executors assume retirement savings go to the estate automatically. It doesn't. Retirement savings are paid according to the beneficiary designation, not the Will.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Check Section 11 for retirement savings details
- Contact the retirement savings fund immediately
- Check for your named beneficiary designations
- Beneficiary designations should be reviewed regularly (check the date)
- Retirement savings can be paid to dependents or the estate

PITFALL 17: Underestimating how long it takes

THE MISTAKE: Executors tell beneficiaries "this will be done in a few months." A year later, it's still not settled, and everyone is angry.

HOW TO AVOID IT:

- Set realistic expectations from the start
- Set realistic expectations early. Let beneficiaries know that settling an estate often takes many months, sometimes longer, and that delays are normal, rather than promising a specific timeframe you can't control.
- Explain that delays are normal
- Update them regularly on progress
- Don't promise timelines you can't control

SUMMARY: THE GOLDEN RULES

1. Don't rush. Take your time and get it right.
2. Keep detailed records. Document everything.
3. Get professional help. Lawyers and accountants are worth it.
4. Communicate with beneficiaries. Transparency prevents conflict.
5. Follow the Will. Not family pressure.
6. Don't distribute until debts are paid and IRS clearance is received.
7. Open a separate estate bank account.
8. Get professional valuations.
9. Be patient with yourself. This is hard work.

You're doing your best. That's all anyone can ask.

NOTES: WHICH OF THESE APPLY TO THIS ESTATE, AND HOW YOU'LL HANDLE THEM

Executor Expense Log Template

As an executor, you'll spend money on behalf of the estate.

Lawyer fees. Accountant fees. Funeral costs. Property valuations. Travel expenses. Postage. Death certificates. Probate application fees.

All of these costs are paid from the estate, not from your own pocket. But you need to keep detailed records of every expense to prove what you spent and why.

This expense log helps you track everything.

Why keep detailed records?

Beneficiaries have the right to see how the estate's money was spent. If you can't prove an expense was legitimate, you might have to pay it back yourself.

Detailed records also protect you from accusations of mismanagement.

TOTALS AND NOTES

Notification Templates

After someone dies, you need to notify dozens of organizations.

Banks. Retirement plan administrators. Social Security. Insurance companies. Employers. Tax authorities. Utilities. Each one needs to be told formally, usually in writing.

This section provides letter templates you can adapt and use.

These templates are starting points. You'll need to customize them with specific details (names, account numbers, dates). But they give you the structure and wording to make notifications easier.

How to use these templates:

1. Choose the template that matches who you're notifying
2. Fill in the bracketed information with your details
3. Attach a certified copy of the death certificate
4. Keep a copy of every letter you send
5. Follow up if you don't hear back within 2 weeks

Let's make notifications easier.

PART TEN

Maintaining & Updating

Keeping it current - because life changes, and this should change with it.

- 43 Commit to Timely Updates
- 44 Annual Update Worksheet
- 45 Life Event Inserts

Commit to Timely Updates

This organizer is only valuable if it's current.

If you fill it out today and never touch it again, in five years it'll be full of outdated information. Closed bank accounts. Old addresses. Changed wishes.

Your executor will waste time tracking down accounts that don't exist anymore and trying to contact people who've moved.

Why annual updates matter:

Life doesn't stand still. You retire. You move. You remarry. You sell property. You open new accounts. Your retirement account balance grows. Your children have children.

An annual review keeps this organizer accurate. It takes an hour once a year. That's it.

And when something major happens (you get divorced, you buy a business, you're diagnosed with a serious illness), update it immediately. Don't wait for the annual review.

How to make annual updates easy:

Pick a date that's easy to remember. Your birthday. New Year's Day. Your anniversary. The anniversary of completing this organizer. Whatever works for you.

Set a recurring reminder on your phone or calendar. Make it an appointment with yourself.

When the reminder goes off, set aside an hour. Go through each section. Update what's changed. Cross out what's no longer relevant. Add new information.

Use Section 44 (the Annual Update Worksheet) to track what you've changed each year.

That's it. One hour a year keeps this organizer valuable.

When to update immediately (don't wait for annual review):

Update this organizer immediately when:

- You get married, divorced, or separated
- You have a child or grandchild
- You buy or sell property
- You start or close a business
- You change jobs or retire

- You're diagnosed with a serious illness
- You update your Will
- You open or close bank accounts
- You buy or sell investments
- You take out new insurance or cancel existing policies
- Your executor dies or becomes unable to serve
- You move house
- A beneficiary dies
- You have a major falling out with a family member

Life events trigger updates. Don't put them off.

Where to note updates:

There are two places to record updates:

1. In the relevant section: Cross out old information and write the new information next to it.

Date the change.

2. In Section 44 (Annual Update Worksheet): Note what changed and when.

This creates a clear record of what's current and what's outdated.

What if you forget to update?

It happens. Life gets busy.

If you realize it's been two or three years since you reviewed this, don't panic. Just set aside time to do a full review now. Update everything. Then commit to the annual review going forward.

Better late than never.

A message to your executor:

If you're reading this as an executor, check the Annual Update Worksheet (Section 44) to see when this organizer was last updated.

If it was updated recently (within the past year), the information is probably current.

If it's been several years, some information might be outdated. Use it as a starting point, but verify details with banks, retirement plan administrators, and other institutions.

Keep this current. Your family will thank you.

WHEN TO UPDATE IMMEDIATELY

Don't wait for your annual review when these happen - update this organizer IMMEDIATELY:

Annual Update Worksheet

Use this worksheet to track your annual reviews and updates.

Every time you review this organizer (ideally once a year), record the date and note what you changed. This creates a clear history of updates and shows your executor that you kept this current.

How to use this worksheet:

1. Set your annual review date (pick a memorable date)
2. When that date comes around, review the entire organizer
3. Update any sections that have changed
4. Record what you changed in this worksheet
5. Sign and date it

That's it. Simple but important.

Let's track your updates.

QUICK REFERENCE: WHAT TO CHECK EACH YEAR

Contact, medical and healthcare details still current?

Will still current? Executor and guardian still able?

Funeral wishes changed?

Accounts, retirement balances and beneficiary designations still correct? Beneficiary designations on 401(k)s, IRAs and life insurance are easy to forget and often override your Will, so review who you've named from time to time and update it directly with each provider if anything has changed.

Property, investments or business changes?

New debts, or debts paid off? Loans made to others?

Digital accounts, passwords and devices up to date?

Memberships, subscriptions and utilities current?

Legacy letters and wishes still reflect how you feel?

Death Certificate & Post-Death Documents

This section is for your executor to complete after your death.

When someone dies, there are documents that need to be obtained and stored. The most important is the death certificate.

This section provides a place to keep copies of these documents organized and accessible.

For your executor:

After a death, you'll need to obtain several documents. Keep copies here for easy reference.

What documents to store here:

Death certificate. Issued by a doctor or hospital. Required to register the death.

Death Certificate. Issued by the state Vital Records office after the death is registered. Several organizations will ask for a certified copy, so it's common to order a few, and you can usually request more later if you run short.

Letters Testamentary. Issued by the Probate court. Gives you legal authority to administer the estate.

Letters of Administration. If there's no Will, you'll apply for Letters of Administration instead of Letters Testamentary.

Final Tax Return. Once filed and cleared by the IRS.

Tax confirmation (if applicable). Some estates need to confirm tax matters with the IRS before distributing. Whether that applies here, and what form it takes, depends on the estate, so check with the accountant.

Final Estate Accounts. Summary of all assets, debts, expenses, and distributions.

How to use this section:

Attach copies of these documents as you receive them. Keep the originals in a safe place. These copies will be a quick reference when you need to check dates, details, or information.

List of Roles in Other People's Lives

If you've agreed to be someone's executor, guardian, power of attorney, or trustee, they're counting on you.

When you die, those people need to know that you can no longer fulfill those roles. They'll need to appoint someone else.

This section documents all the formal roles you hold in other people's lives so your executor knows who to notify.

WHY THIS MATTERS

If you're someone's executor and you die, they need to update their Will and appoint a new executor.

If you're the guardian named in someone's Will for their children, they need to know so they can name a replacement.

If you're someone's power of attorney and you die, they're left without anyone to make financial decisions if they become incapacitated.

Your executor needs to notify these people so they can make alternative arrangements.

Let's document the roles you hold.

NOTES: ANYONE WHO RELIES ON YOU IN A FORMAL ROLE

You Did It.

Take a moment to appreciate what you've just done.

You've documented your whole life, your assets, debts, wishes and stories, in one place where the people you love can find it. Most people never do this. They mean to, they plan to, they tell themselves they'll get to it one day. But they don't. You did.

What you're holding isn't just account numbers and policy details. It's an act of love, the difference between your family spending months in confusion and knowing exactly what to do, between arguing over what you would have wanted and reading your wishes in your own words.

Your executor won't have to play detective. Your family won't have to guess. Your stories won't be lost. You've given them clarity, time, and peace.

Now do three things:

1. Tell someone where this book is.

Your executor, your spouse, one trusted person. If nobody knows it exists, everything here is wasted.

2. Set your annual review date.

Pick a day, your birthday or New Year's, and update it once a year so it stays current.

3. Have the conversation.

Tell your family this book exists, where to find it, and what's in it. Then close this book, put it somewhere safe, and go spend time with the people you love. They're the reason you did this, and one day they'll be grateful you did.

Important Legal Information

IMPORTANT: This organizer is an information-gathering and record-keeping tool only. It does not constitute legal, financial, or tax advice and is not a substitute for consulting qualified professionals. It is not a Will, Power of Attorney, Advance Directive / Living Will, or any other legal document. Nothing in this organizer creates, modifies, or replaces any legal instrument. Estate planning laws differ across U.S. states and change over time. You must engage qualified professionals - including a lawyer, licensed financial advisor, and licensed tax professional - for advice specific to your circumstances. Prestige Worldwright Pty Ltd accepts no liability for any loss, damage, cost, or consequence arising from the use of, or reliance on, any information in this organizer. Use at your own risk.

IMPORTANT LEGAL DISCLAIMER

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE USING THIS ORGANIZER This Estate Organizer is an information-gathering and record-keeping tool. It is designed to help you organize your personal, financial, and legal information in one place so your executor and loved ones can find it when they need it. That is all it does. It does not give you legal advice. It does not give you financial advice. It does not give you tax advice. It does not replace any professional.

WHAT THIS ORGANIZER IS NOT This organizer is NOT:

- A Will or testament
- A legally binding document of any kind
- A Power of Attorney or Durable Power of Attorney
- An Advance Directive or Living Will
- A beneficiary designation for any 401(k), IRA, Roth IRA, pension plan, or life insurance policy

- A trust deed, corporate document, or succession plan
- A substitute for professional legal, financial, or tax advice
- Valid, binding, or enforceable in any court or jurisdiction in the United States No section of this organizer - regardless of what you write in it - creates, amends, revokes, or replaces any legal document. Writing your wishes in this organizer does not make them legally binding. Only properly drafted and executed legal documents prepared by a qualified lawyer can do that.

WHAT YOU MUST DO This organizer supports your estate plan. It does not create one. To create a valid, legally enforceable estate plan in the United States, you MUST:

- Engage a qualified lawyer (licensed to practice in your state) to draft your Will - a DIY or online Will may not be valid or may fail to account for critical state requirements
- Engage a lawyer to prepare your Powers of Attorney (for property/finances) and your Advance Directive or Living Will (for healthcare) - the terminology and legal requirements vary by state
- Complete beneficiary designations directly with your 401(k), IRA, Roth IRA, pension plan, and life insurance providers - and review them regularly, as designations that conflict with your Will can create costly disputes
- Consult with a licensed financial planner or investment advisor for financial matters, including insurance, investments, and retirement accounts
- Consult with a Certified Public Accountant (CPA) or tax professional for tax matters, including your final tax return, estate and gift tax obligations, and any outstanding amounts owed to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS)
- Review your estate plan whenever your circumstances change - including marriage, divorce, separation, domestic partnership changes, the birth or death of a beneficiary, a significant change in assets, a move to a different state, or a change in the law Do not assume that completing this organizer means your estate plan is "done." It is not done until a qualified lawyer has reviewed your legal documents and confirmed they are valid, current, and consistent with your wishes.

STATE-BY-STATE DIFFERENCES This is critically important. The United States does not have uniform estate planning laws. Each state has its own legislation governing:

- Wills and estate succession
- Powers of Attorney (terminology and requirements vary by state)
- Advance healthcare directives

- Probate and estate administration (including widely varying probate fees and procedures)
- Family law provisions that may override your Will (community property rights, elective share claims, and dependent support claims)
- Intestacy rules (what happens if you die without a valid Will) Louisiana operates under a civil law system, which is fundamentally different from the common law system used in all other states. If you live in Louisiana, some of the general principles discussed in this organizer may not apply to you, and you should consult a Louisiana attorney for guidance. What is valid in one state may not be valid in another. If you own property in multiple states, you may need separate legal advice in each state.

LIMITATIONS

- Laws change. This organizer was written based on general principles current as at February 2026. Federal and state legislation, court decisions, and regulatory requirements may have changed since then.
 - Tax laws (including the treatment of 401(k)s, IRAs, Roth IRAs, and estate taxes, and step-up in basis rules), Social Security rules, and Medicare/Medicaid eligibility are complex and change frequently. Do not rely on any general information in this organizer as a substitute for specific advice from a CPA, licensed financial planner, or tax professional.
 - Your personal circumstances are unique. This organizer provides general information only. It cannot and does not address your specific situation, family structure, asset mix, blended family considerations, or estate planning needs.
 - Domestic partnership relationships are treated differently across states for estate planning purposes. If you are in a domestic partnership, seek legal advice specific to your state.
 - Digital asset laws, cryptocurrency regulations, and online account terms of service are rapidly evolving areas. Professional advice is essential.
 - Indigenous communities may have additional considerations relating to tribal lands, treaty rights, and federal Indian law. Specialized legal advice is strongly recommended.
- NO LIABILITY Prestige Worldwright Pty Ltd and its members, managers, officers, employees, contractors, agents, and representatives:

- Make no warranties or representations, express or implied, about the accuracy, completeness, currency, reliability, or suitability of any information in this organizer

Understanding the Probate Process

Probate is the legal process of proving a Will is valid and giving your executor the authority to distribute your estate.

In simple terms: after you die, someone (usually your executor) takes your Will to the probate court in your state and asks the court to confirm it's legitimate. Once the court approves it, your executor gets a document called a Letters Testamentary (or Letters of Administration if there is no Will). That document gives them the legal power to access your bank accounts, sell your property, and distribute your assets according to your Will.

Without probate, banks and government agencies won't let your executor touch your money or property. They need proof that your Will is real and that your executor has the authority to act.

When an estate is organized and the Will is straightforward, probate tends to move faster, because your executor isn't hunting for information. How long it actually takes varies a lot by state and situation, so treat any timeframe as a rough idea rather than a promise.

If your estate is a mess, your executor has to track down every asset, your family is arguing about the Will, or there are debts no one knew about, probate can take well over a year.

What does probate cost?

Probate has some court fees, but the bigger cost is usually professional fees. What it ends up costing depends a lot on your state, the size of the estate, how organized things are, and whether anyone contests the Will. Lawyers also charge in different ways, by the hour, a flat fee, or a percentage in some states. The clearer and more organized your estate is, the less work there is to pay for. For real numbers, ask a local estate lawyer what to expect in your state.

The more work your executor has to do (finding documents, tracking down assets, dealing with disputes), the more it costs.

How this organizer helps with probate.

Probate is easier when your estate is organized.

If your executor can open this book and find your Will, your list of assets, your debts, your retirement savings details, and your account numbers, they'll save weeks of work. That means lower legal fees, faster probate, and less stress for your family.

Most of the time spent (and money wasted) in probate is searching for information. You can eliminate that by writing it down now.
