RE: Request for Public Retraction or Clarification of PPSA Media Statement Dated 11 May 2026

Dear Adv. Gcaleka,

I write as a South African citizen, content creator, and member of the public concerned about the media statement issued by the Public Protector South Africa on 11 May 2026, titled "Constitutional Court Judgment on National Assembly Impeachment Process."

At the outset, I accept that the PPSA is entitled to clarify its view that the Constitutional Court judgment in Economic Freedom Fighters and Another v Speaker of the National Assembly and Others (CCT 35/24), handed down on 8 May 2026, addressed Parliament's section 89 process and did not assess, overturn, or make findings on the Public Protector's Report No. 12 of 2023/2024. That clarification, standing alone, is understandable.

However, I am deeply concerned by the following paragraphs in the statement:

"The PPSA takes this opportunity to remind members of the public that insulting the Public Protector or the Deputy Public Protector constitutes a criminal offence in terms of section 9(a) of the Public Protector Act."

"Any person convicted of this offence may be liable, in terms of section 11 of the Act, to a fine not exceeding R40,000 or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months, or to both such fine and imprisonment."

"The right to freedom of expression, guaranteed under section 16 of the Constitution, is not unlimited. It is subject to lawful limitations and does not extend to conduct that constitutes a statutory criminal offence."

While the statement does acknowledge that members of the public are encouraged to engage with the PPSA's findings and that such engagement forms part of democratic accountability, this qualifier does not sufficiently address the concerns raised.

The statement prominently warns that “insulting” the Public Protector may attract fines of up to R40,000 and imprisonment of up to 12 months. Its later references to lawful engagement, “the confines of the law” and “human dignity” do not cure the chilling effect. In the context of a highly contested report, such language risks equating robust, sharp, or satirical criticism with criminal conduct. The undefined nature of “insulting” compounds this problem, as it leaves the boundary between protected speech and criminality unclear.

In context, this warning is improper and constitutionally concerning.

The statement was issued after the PPSA “noted with concern” public comments following the Constitutional Court judgment. It moved directly from defending the PPSA’s Phala Phala report to warning members of the public about criminal punishment. This creates a reasonable apprehension that robust criticism of the Public Protector, the Deputy Public Protector, the Phala Phala report, or the office’s conduct may attract criminal sanction.

Such an approach is incompatible with the Public Protector’s constitutional role. As a Chapter 9 institution, the office is established under section 181 of the Constitution to strengthen constitutional democracy. It must be independent and impartial, and exercise its powers without fear, favour or prejudice. At the same time, section 181(5) makes clear that Chapter 9 institutions are accountable to the National Assembly. Section 195 further requires that public administration be accountable, transparent, and responsive.

The Public Protector exists to protect ordinary citizens from abuse of power. It should therefore be among the institutions most careful not to chill public criticism. Citizens must feel free to confront power; including the power exercised by constitutional watchdogs themselves.

This is not a plea that threats, harassment, defamation, or obstruction of investigations be tolerated. Such conduct remains unlawful. The issue is that the PPSA invoked a criminal provision in a broad public statement without reference to any specific unlawful conduct. Instead, the warning appeared amid a politically charged controversy involving criticism of the office’s own report on the President. This gives the impression of institutional self-protection rather than neutral legal education.

Additional concerns regarding the statutory reference and section 9(1)(a):

The statement refers imprecisely to “section 9(a)” of the Public Protector Act. The prohibition appears in section 9(1)(a), while the offence and penalty provisions are contained in section 11. A public warning about criminal liability should meet the highest standards of legal precision, particularly when it engages the constitutional right to freedom of expression under section 16 of the Constitution.

Furthermore, section 9(1)(a) prohibits “insulting” the Public Protector or the Deputy Public Protector without defining the term, without requiring any link to obstruction of an investigation, and without distinguishing between unlawful intimidation and robust democratic criticism, satire, or political speech.

South African constitutional jurisprudence emphasises that limitations on expression must be reasonable and justifiable in an open and democratic society, and that overbroad provisions capable of chilling protected speech should be interpreted narrowly. Invoking such a provision in this context risks undermining public accountability.

The Public Protector should be warning office-bearers against the abuse of power, not warning citizens against the abuse of words.

Accordingly, I respectfully request that the PPSA issue a public retraction or clarification of the 11 May 2026 statement, expressly confirming the following:

1. That members of the public are fully entitled to robustly criticise the Public Protector, the Deputy Public Protector, the PPSA, and the Phala Phala report, including its reasoning, conclusions and remedial action.
2. That ordinary democratic criticism, political commentary, media scrutiny, satire, or strong public disagreement with its reports does not constitute criminal conduct.
3. That the warning about criminal punishment was not intended to intimidate, discourage or chill lawful public criticism.
4. That the PPSA will not use the Public Protector Act to shield itself from legitimate public accountability.
5. That any future public statements invoking statutory offence provisions will be drafted with full precision and proper context.
6. That its independence as a Chapter 9 institution does not place it beyond public criticism or parliamentary oversight.

This request is not made by me alone. As at 12:52 on 14 May 2026, it had been endorsed by 1,072 concerned members of the South African public across all nine provinces.

Please provide the requested public retraction or clarification by no later than 16:30 on 28 May 2026.

Should the PPSA fail to respond adequately, I intend to submit this correspondence, together with public endorsements from concerned South Africans, to the Portfolio Committee on Justice and Constitutional Development. I will request that the Committee call the Public Protector to account for the statement, including by requiring the PPSA to explain its interpretation of section 9(1)(a), what safeguards it applies to prevent that provision from chilling lawful public criticism, and whether the provision requires legislative clarification or narrowing.

For the avoidance of doubt, this correspondence is not an attack on the office of the Public Protector. It is a defence of the public's right to hold that office accountable. A constitutional institution created to protect the public must not address the public in a manner that appears to threaten it.

Yours faithfully,

Bonsai Shongwe
