Taxation

Dubai and the broader UAE are globally recognized for their highly favorable tax regime, making the region an attractive destination for entrepreneurs and businesses alike. One of the biggest advantages is the absence of personal income tax, meaning individuals do not pay taxes on their salaries, investments, or capital gains.

In terms of corporate taxation, the UAE introduced a corporate tax in 2023 at a highly competitive rate of 9%, applicable to businesses with profits exceeding AED 375,000 (approximately $100,000).

However, until 2026, both mainland and free zone companies can take advantage of the Small Business Relief. Under this scheme, businesses with annual revenues below AED 3 million are exempt from paying corporate taxes, providing significant tax relief to small enterprises and startups.

In addition, certain activities, such as holding companies that generate passive income from dividends or capital gains, can be entirely tax-exempt. Furthermore, Free Zone companies located in designated Free Zones may also benefit from a full exemption from corporate tax, provided they meet specific regulatory requirements.

Different Ways to become a Dubai Resident

Dubai offers multiple pathways to residency, each catering to different types of entrepreneurs, investors, and professionals. Below are the main options to obtain a Dubai residence visa:

1. Business Setup & Company-Sponsored Visa

- Establish your own company in Dubai, which can sponsor your residency.
- The visa is valid for 2 years and renewable.
- Important to note: Statutory bookkeeping is required, meaning financial statements must be prepared and corporate tax filed, even if the company is inactive. However, compliance costs are relatively low.

2. Investment-Based Residency

- Investor Visa (2 years): Requires a minimum investment of 750,000 AED in real estate or government bonds.
- Golden Visa (10 years): Requires an investment of 2 million AED in real estate or government bonds.
- Provides long-term stability and benefits for investors.

3. Employment Visa

- If you secure a job in Dubai, your employer can sponsor your residence visa.
- The visa is valid for 2 years and renewable.
- This is the most common route for professionals moving to Dubai.

Free Self-Sponsored Residency

Dubai offers a unique opportunity for self-sponsored residency through certain free zones. Unlike traditional company-sponsored visas, this option allows entrepreneurs and freelancers to obtain a residence visa without ongoing business operations.

- Typically, free zones charge an initial fee and a renewal fee every 2 years per visa, which is around $1,000 USD in Dubai.
- However, this fee is occasionally waived, meaning you can secure a residence visa at no additional cost for certain periods.
- We regularly update our audience about these opportunities in our videos, helping you save on visa expenses in the long run.

This makes Dubai an even more attractive destination for entrepreneurs and remote workers looking for an affordable and flexible residency solution.
